

Grimsley's DE Club Hosts Convention

"I wouldn't trade the experience of running for an office for anything. I'd be missing too much!" states Pat Tumbleson, newly elected associate president of the Sixth District Distributive Education Club.

Pat, a junior, was elected during the Sixth District Distributive Education Leadership Conference staged in the GHS auditorium Wednesday, November 10. The Sixth District DE Club is composed of 17 chapters throughout Alamance, Greensboro, and Guilford.

"This year's convention was very successful, but then these conventions are always planned to be such," adds Ralph Beaver, second year DE student.

GHS HOSTS CONVENTION
The convention, hosted by the Grimsley DE Club, began at 2:30 p.m. Highlighting the afternoon's activities was the job interview contest, in which students pretended to be job applicants. The judges, acting as employers in the contest, named Grimsley's Diane Bennett second place winner.

A major purpose of this year's convention was to elect new district officers. New Associate President Pat Tumbleson explained that candidates were required to pass an interview with the screening committee and then present their speeches to the delegation gathered for the convention.

Charlie Sandlin and Diane Bennett served as last year's district president and associate president, respectively.

Afternoon contests and speeches came to a close with the Page DE Club's presentation of a skit and the Grimsley Club's highlighted mock fashion show featuring the latest in "boy's skirts."

Following dinner, the 674 delegates attending the convention met for the presentation of the 1966 District DE Sweetheart, job interview winners, and 1966 DE officers.

DE COURSE IS VALUABLE

"A tremendous sense of accomplishment comes from being able to put to use on a job all the things learned in class," states Ralph Beaver.

Pat adds that the course instills a sense of responsibility in individuals. "It is hard work, yet we are still required to keep up our grades at school."

First year DE students work after school and on weekends, while second year students hold jobs each week day starting at 1 p.m. Greensboro businesses offer various job opportunities to DE students. Pat drives a school bus, while Ralph is presently working at a service station. Other opportunities are open in the fields of selling and marketing.

"DE is a tremendous experience, as well as good training. It often opens the door to a person's entire future," concluded Pat.

Has anyone noticed that they are missing their Christmas tree stand? Well, if you have, Ellen Taylor has several that she borrowed for last year's May Day. She is anxious to return these so contact her in homeroom M-204 if she has yours.

As every good spy should know, camouflage is an essential technique which must be mastered if the spy is to stay alive. Here you see a spy studying his training manual on camouflage. The spy must be aware of background when he camouflages himself. This spy has the technique down pat; except he forgot to camouflage his book. Unfortunately this slip cost him his James Bond Secret 007 Club Pin and his life.

Tips For Novice Spys: Shades of Mata Hari

In accordance with the trend toward spys and spy stories, HIGH LIFE is publishing its own list of necessities for the would-be spy.

The first requirement of a spy is his code number. Every spy must have one. An 00 number is best. This lends a certain mysterious aspect to the spy business. A good number for a novice spy is 000.

Another requirement for a spy is a crusty old superior officer who is too old for an active job in "the Service." This character is necessary to call the novice "a young whippersnapper," and to say such nifty catch phrases as "It wasn't like this when I was in the Service." "This is going to be the most dangerous assignment you have ever faced," and the old classic, "Be careful 000. I've grown quite fond of you, you know."

The next immediate necessity is at least six dozen pretty girls. (And one ugly one so that the spy can show off his brotherly instincts.) These girls are also necessary to fill in during the time that the hero is resting from his stuntman's strenuous encounters with villains.

Next the hero needs at least twenty devices conceived by creative geniuses especially for this one escapade.

An agent must also be prepared to fight villains at the odds of at least fifty to one and always win without ever getting a wrinkle in his tuxedo.

It's not as easy as it looks, being a 00 spy.
