

Connect The Dots, Other Games Played At Scat-Step Tests

The Scat-Step Tests, developed by Drs. Cat Scat and Wachyer Step, were designed to let sophomores show their stupidity in its fullest with embarrassing questions as "What is a dog?"

- A. A hairy animal
- B. A hairless animal
- C. Something that goes bump in the night
- D. Norkum's girlfriend, Nellie.

Your typical sophomore would obviously answer "D". This is definitely wrong. The answer is "B." A dog is hairless after Baby Brother finds the scissors.

The Scat-Step Tests have been given to all sophomores with an I.Q. between -27 and 24. Superintendent of Schools, W. J. House, chose these margins so all sophomores would be included.

The tests, which were administered March 10 through 15, had absolutely no value and will be graded by a computer with even less value, causing general disorder in the plutonium core-geophysical ReVerbromatic Regulator.

Number "2" pencils were used on the tests and the object was to fill in as many dots as possible while reading Tom, Dick, and Jane and listening to Mrs. Moody . . . All at the same time!

After all the dots were filled in, lines connecting them were drawn, forming a picture of the student for identification purposes.

Patience on the part of Juniors and Seniors has not gone unnoticed. For their co-operation PSAT and College Board Exams were developed as rewards.

Flashlight Ceremonies

National Dishonor Society Many Trials; Many Tributes

Flashlight, the Grimsley Chapter of the National Dishonor Society (NDS), will hold its annual induction ceremonies on April 4, as has been the tradition in recent years.

As always the NDS will hold three tests to determine the person who will be inaugurated in Flashlight. Only those capable of withstanding the pressure of these trials will become official members.

The initial feat, quaffing many gallons of the raunchiest beverage on the market, will serve as a stepping stone for the remaining tests. After the beverage has been terminated, each hopeful inductee will be required to ride shotgun in his jacked-up cars, which have not been washed or waxed for two weeks.

Moving to the second trial, a combination of old worn out fads, includes a panty raid on the girls' gym, stuffing a telephone booth which in turn will be stuffed into

Student-Teacher Relations Week To Be Observed

At the end of the last six weeks grading period Grimsley High School along with the rest of the high schools in Greensboro were invaded by several so called student teachers.

For the benefit of those who don't know, student-teachers are inexperienced students in their final phase of education before receiving their bachelor's degree which will entitle them to teach on their own.

There are two types of student-teachers: the first type are the Know It Alls. These are student-teachers who try to make a big impression in the student's mind by using the biggest words he or she knows. This almost always makes an impression on the student—but not in the mind.

Know It Alls use several different techniques in showing their intelligence: One technique is the CIA (Cover It All) technique. That's when the student-teacher talks the whole period about everything that comes into his mind, anything from the subject matter to the weather. Then when test day comes the student finds

Student-Teachers Invade; Grimsley Campus In Turmoil

Sometime during the month of April, Grimsley will observe Student-Teacher Relations Week. This will give the students and teachers a chance to appreciate the toils and tribulations of each other's jobs.

Students will take turns in each class portraying the role of the teacher. This will include preparing a lesson sure to put every member of the class to sleep. Their mission will not be accomplished until each head drops off. Then the students must prepare a test for the class totally off the subject of which they discussed during the week. There should be at least two gasps and one obscenity from each person taking the test. They will also take the tests home, grade them and return them at least a month later.

During this week the teachers,

G.H.S. Curriculum To Adopt Modular System

G.H.S. Administrators were informed recently that Grimsley Senior High School has been selected to change over to a modular school program next year. The announcement came from Dr. W. J. House, Superintendent of the Greensboro City Schools System.

In addition to being the model school for the Greensboro School System, many school officials from throughout the state will be visiting the campus next year to study the advantages and problems of converting to the modular system.

The modular system calls for classes to be taught in modules, usually twenty minute periods. According to the plan, which has had scattered success in the North, each class would last one module, with some exceptions. Science courses could last two or three modules on days in which an extended class period was needed. In addition, the vocational arts classes would last two to three modules daily.

With the advent of the modular system at Grimsley, many changes in classroom and building assignments will be made. The completion of the new science building, with construction beginning next month, is expected by late August. The top of the Science Building will then be converted into student lounges, where it is expected that many students will spend part of their day. The overflow of students from the lounges is to be accommodated in the cafeteria.

Meanwhile, girls' physical education classes will move to the boys' gym, leaving the girls' gym open to students with free time. The completion of the swimming pool by 1975 will further add to the exercisial opportunities open to the student body.

In answering questions from a HIGH LIFE reporter, Dr. House said that Grimsley was chosen for two main reasons. First, Grimsley is the most established school in Greensboro and thus, should be able to make the necessary transition the easiest. Secondly, the G.H.S. campus is the largest and most spread out—making it the most adaptable to the necessary changes.

Mr. Glenn, in a mood of ecstasy, expressed with regard the selection of Grimsley as the model. However, he displayed skepticism, saying, "It will take the co-operation of the entire student body and faculty to make the program a success. However, if everyone works together, I'm sure that Grimsley will remain the greatest school in the state."

Aardvark Salvation Society Hits Grimsley Becomes Great Success

At 2:05 a.m. four bunque sheepherders sighted what they believed to be a herd of 20 rare American Aardvarks, led by a large rogue, in the plains of eastern Montana. The reason for this late release is that the sheepherders had no means of communication while on the trail and upon reaching civilization they had to find an interpreter because they spoke no English. The Aardvark Salvation Society has dispatched search helicopters and mobile communication units to the area, but the prospects of finding the herd are slim due to the time lost between the sighting and the report. A.S.S. is also investigating reported sightings in Indiana, Wyoming, and Arizona, but these are believed to be hoaxes. A.S.S. would like anyone who has seen or knows of any American Aardvarks to call them at 277-3463 or ASS-FIND.

A.S.S. is working with a skeleton staff because all officers are in Montana aiding in the search, so if you must call, call between 4:00 and 4:02 a.m. every other
