Out of the Blue

Cedric Cokely, a Grimsley security officer, was unexpectedly recalled to the Los Angeles Lakers on March 27. A rash of injuries have forced the Lakers to former try-outs like Cokely.

"Ced's wiry frame should allow for more mobility around the basket and safe storage in the overhead compartment," Laker Coach Del Harris said.

The Lakers have also had to cut down on travel costs.

A lecture on world history will be delivered in the auditorium on April 7 by acclaimed speakers Ted "Theodore" Logan and Bill S. Preston, Esq. When asked about the surprise trip to GHS, Preston replied "It's history...and...GRIMSLEY HIGH SCHOOL FOOTBALL RULES!!"

Some students might remember the pair from their heavy-metal band Wyld Stallyns. The lecture's hours will be, in the words of Logan, "From six to nine, dudes!"

The Student-faculty basketball game was such a success that the athletic department has decided to pursue Student-faculty games in other sports. Sign-up sheets for next week's Smuckers wrestling contest will be in the basement. Contestants will be forced to "dip" themselves in a large jar of Smuckers premixed peanut butter/ and jelly, than jump on the wrestling mat and attempt to "pin" each other. The date for the Student-faculty string bikini contest is yet to be announced. Air sickness bags will be provided.

The staff at Biscuitville Restaurant decided yesterday to pander to the needs of their young clients. Inside every biscuit served at the restaurant, the staff will place a wad of tobacco equivalent to that inside every cigarette. The president of the company thought that by cutting out the middle man, namely, the gas stations where the youngsters buy the cigarettes, he could provide his customers an invaluable service and help purify the air at his restaurant.

Latin American music inspires riot

By Rico Suave
Staff Writer

The National Guard was recently spotted on the Grimsley campus after a riot was incited by crazed Menudo terrorists. The band kicked off their comeback tour at Jamieson Stadium this past week.

The South American music group, who made famous such hits as "Chocolate Candy," and "You And Me All The Way," has been off the air waves since the release of their self-titled album in 1985. The five young men are back, with no new material, but ready to rock. In an exclusive interview, lead singer Alejandro Monroy revealed the group's plans for the future. He said, "Now that we are all in elementary and middle school we're going to tour across the country playing in local malls. Then we have been asked to sponsor the first annual 'Rock For Castro' benefit concert."

It was with that air of success and confidence that they entered the Grimsley arena, swept with panic, and in the rush to escape the violent scene, a riot ensued.

Fortunately the death toll was minimal, with only a few students mauled to death.

When asked to comment on the situation Monroy said, "The riot was...very...well...San Diemas High School football rules!" Fortunately, the terrorists' deadly intentions were deflected by the band's bodyguards, Brutus The Barber Beefcake and Big Daddy Cool Diesel who proudly gave their lives for the protection of their employers, and in the process surrendered every chance of winning the Heavyweight Championship of the World.

When the situation escalated, Mr. Penland was forced to call in professional help. The local chapter of the National Whirlie students lost it when terrorists attacked at the Menudo concert.

The Grimsley students were simple victims of this crime against humanity, and we won't stand for this type of exorbitant behavior." Penland's trip to Asia a front

By Miss Money Penny
Secretary

Supposedly, Mr. Penland traveled to Asia on February the 24th to promote multiculturalism in schools around the world. New sources say, however, that the entire trip is a front, and that Mr. Penland is a secret agent.

Mr. Thomas Penland's job as Grimsley's devoted principal is only an identity to protect him. Two years ago, he came to Grimsley after his cover had been blown as a used-car salesman. He had been working under cover, trying to expose a ring of religious vandals whose car graffiti served as a secret code for a guerilla group of Saddam Hussein's supporters. Mr. Penland almost had them, but an unexpected visit from his wife blew his cover. The CIA had to remove him quickly and send in another agent.

The exact reason for Mr. Penland's sojourn at Grimsley is a bit sketchy, with the exception of two prominent facts. One, this was the safest place the Central Intelligence Agency could think up for such a daredevil spy, and two, Europe's Central Intelligence, Interpol, has gotten word of a secret organization of Australian terrorists bent on conquering and dominating North America, starting with the United States.

The odd smell surrounding the basement of Main Building led Interpol to believe that the group is working out of a nuclear laboratory in the area. The trip to "Asia" was actually an emergency meeting called by both the CIA and Interpol in London to discuss strategy for this touchy situation.

Many students were not surprised when Mr. Penland's true identity was revealed. Robyn Kohn, a junior, said, "Yeah, I guess I can see Mr. Penland as a secret spy. I wouldn't have known whose side he's on, but you can definitely tell he's a double agent. I mean, he's got that smooth, suave, double agent hair, and he's always hiding in his office."

Many here at Grimsley feel a lot safer now that Mr. Penland, the CIA's bravest and most trusted spy, is in residence. Ace Ventura may not be real and there may be no James Bond, but watch out, you might see Thomas Penland parachuting off the roof of Main Building or jetting off with a rocket pack to catch the "bad guys."
