Quiet whispering envelops the hallways as the shocking news of Principal Anna Brady’s recent disappearance rapidly spreads. Brady was due to arrive at her daily principals’ meeting to discuss the latest budget cuts regarding paper and copier usage but failed to show up. Assistant principals immediately knew something was not kosher because Brady has never once been late to an appointment in her entire educational career.

“I knew immediately something was wrong because collaborating with colleagues is one of her true passions, and she would literally have to be chained to a chair or something to miss the opportunity to fight for toilet paper and ink cartridges,” said Assistant Principal Feather Hyll with a mixture of disbelief and worry frozen on her face.

Unfortunately, kidnapping looks to be the most likely cause of her vanishing. In the last few months, principals of Southwest, Northern, and Dudley high schools have all disappeared. A mysterious parent has been sending disturbing emails to the schools and requiring funding for her home school business, or else the principals will face the embarrassment of finding their photos in pajamas on Facebook.

“Greensboro’s police department thinks that the previous kidnappings were just a cover for the capture of Ms. Brady. We think this is retaliation for the refusal of the suspect’s kid to be accepted into Grimsley’s IB program because the family resided within the residence boundaries of Page. We have narrowed down the list of possible suspects to two and should be making an arrest as soon as next week,” said Greensboro’s Chief Deputy of Police, Kent Uckyfried, to the press.

Police have raided wealthy neighborhoods surrounding Grimsley’s rival school, looking for four, middle-aged, stressed-out people grouped in a garage or basement.

“We’re close, really close,” Uckyfried said.

Meanwhile, assistant principals are receiving extra protection out of fear for another attack on the school’s head honchos. People are in a state of fright on campus, and few seniors dare venture off during lunch because of the chance they may never return.

If you have seen any suspicious looking vans with stickers of local sports teams on the rear window or cheese-wedge hybrids circling the school, please report to Officer Gillridge immediately. Torture gripping the citizens of the Whirlie nation cannot be endured much longer.

Rumors are true; a new cafeteria building will be the next major addition to the school. Construction plans have been completed, and the school board approved them by a marginal vote of 17 to 14.97. Cafeteria entrepreneurs will include a salad bar as well as fast-food stands representing Chick-fil-A, Burger King, and Taco Bell. Cheesecake will be shipped in from New York City, along with frozen yogurt bars from Juneau, Alaska, thanks to Sarah Palin. Such a variety of food stands will move lines along faster, thus giving students more time to sit and enjoy their lunches. New restaurant-styled seating will mean booths and round tables, along with rectangular tables. All will have candles and floral arrangements to enhance the decor.

Inspired by the movie “Charlie and the Chocolate Factory,” school officials have decided to create a better, easier way to provide nutritional sustenance to the student body. They will soon hire an architect named Bernard Ronald Brown, who moonlights as a chocolatier, to transform the front lawn into an oozing mass of chocolaty goodness.

“We also thought this huge pool will aid in our fight against childhood obesity since the pupils can swim in it while they are rewarded for their achievements with delicious mouthfuls of sticky sweet goodness,” said Superintendent Boe Blue.

The Naked Lady on the Horse Chocolate Company will provide the confectionaries.

Three initial shipments of five trillion tons of chocolate will be free; however, after those, each student will need to pay one dollar to partake in the festivities. Chocolate will come in five-pound blocks that must be melted individually by the cafeteria staff and gradually poured into the pit.

Special swimming suits will also be available for students so they will not destroy their clothes. Swimwear will be made from dyed white chocolate.

Foundations are the most important part of any architectural structure, and this one is no exception. Brown will be creating masterpiece chocolate bricks of white chocolate flower patterns in a background of dark chocolate. The pool will be finished in the year 3666 and open for student use in 1659.
