daring or more mature - Coilege Grill, which was across the street from Winston-Salem Teachers College, or T.C. as it was called.

When you think about it, the naivete of our youth probably has very little to do with how pleasant it seemed at Christmas 30 years ago. There could be some lessons that can be learned. It has often been said that you have to know where you came from to know where you're going.

Thirty years ago, there was a central place where hundreds of kids gathered at Christmas for wholesome, clean fun. Today, is there a similar place? Thirty years ago, there were viable, thriving black business districts throughout the city. How many can you think of today? Thirty years ago, black parents didn't worry about buying their kids the hundreds of toys that are pushed at them today and then have to wonder whether their kids would be playing with it a week or a month after Christmas.

My, how the times have changed!
