Chessy Chats

It was a rainy Wednesday night. Lucile and her John were walking and obviously carrying on an interesting conversation. The only thing that came between them was a distance of about five feet. (Why so distant, Lucile—you're a Junior).

Love divided ain't true, Helen Williams, and it's about time you decided between radios and Congoleum rugs for your main interest in life.

Will all persons interested in seeing good looking pictures please go look on Flora Lee Payne's dresser . . . Incidentally, his name is Bruce.

Jane and "Ruth" are having "Little" trouble getting along these days.

But speaking of trouble, Pittsy and her Sammy never have any.

Baker and Broadway seem to be hitting it off pretty well these days.

And speaking of Big Broadway, we understand there is a cute little Broadway over Davidson way this year—Is that right, Dot?

Better late than never . . . but aren't bus station acquaintances charming, Baby and Kat. . . . ?

Brooksie doesn't hesitate to while away those lonely hours with friend's best beau. . . . Please, somebody, chaperon her to the grocery store.

Margaret Garrison has supplanted Helen Mallory in finding her heart interest down at the "Little Store."

Our personal nomination for the most perfect Lord Chesterfield of the gridiron is Teeny Lafferty, who tips his helmet to any ladies who chance upon the field.

The old song, "Seven Years With The Wrong Man," means nothing to Lil Smith, 'cause she has had seven years with the right one. . . . (P. S. It took her the seven years to find it out).

It was a cool starlit night . . . A train pulled into the station and two fair maidens descended to the platform and looked about them. There was an expectant hush over the waiting crowd. . . . Suddenly a wild shriek . . . "Pete" . . . echoed and resounded over the big South Carolina station and the more petite of the two travelers deserted her baggage to fling herself at a tall dark and handsome young man. (O well, it might have been her brother . . .).

Want a laugh? Margaret McGregor is going down to see what her brother pledged at P. C. next week-end. (P. S. We wish we had a brother).
