Dean Agnew Gives Talk To Freshmen

Getting Adjusted To College Is Subject of Speech On First Program

During the first freshman chapel program of the year, held on Thursday, September 22, at the regular chapel hour in the Queens-Chicora college auditorium, Mrs. Virginia Miller Agnew spoke to the freshmen on "Getting Adjusted to College Life."

This marked the first in a series of programs. Mrs. Agnew first explained to the freshmen the meaning of orientation. She said, "There are three main adjustments to college life to be made by each student. They are physical, intellectual, and social."

In speaking of the physical adjustment, she said that it was necessary to become adjusted to the campus and its surroundings, to eating and sleeping regularly, and to exercising the right amount.

In connection with the intellectual adjustment, Mrs. Agnew asked the question, "Will you become an inquiring open-minded searcher for truth or a sponge absorbing only what is brought within your mental reach?" She said that it was essential in the social adjustment to become accustomed to the entire group as well as to the individual and smaller groups.

Closes Talk

In closing, Mrs. Agnew said, "Let me tell you that I am glad that you are a student in Queens-Chicora College. You have chosen this college, and it now becomes you to magnify your choice. From day to day its worth will gradually dawn upon you. As you develop in scholarship you will discover its quickening influence on your intellectual life. Its moral standards and ideals will likewise impress themselves on you. College should develop in you an intense reverence for things religious. As you participate in athletics and student activities you will likewise feel the throbbing of the life of the college in your soul. If all these things contribute to you in rightful measure, you may be sure that Queens-Chicora College is the college for you."
