TUTTLE CONFESSES MURDER OF DELANO

Brammer Forces Student To True Confession

Penalty Imposed On Murderer; Has Sympathy Of School

Not long ago an awful thing happened on this campus but so far, conscientious persons have felt that you girls should be protected from such grisly facts. But at last Lib Brammer, who could no longer stand the strain of bearing such a malicious tale by herself, has revealed all. The other morning she came shrieking from her room, howling that she must tell someone. The whole student body fell on her. She tore her hair (pieces of the same can be gotten for souvenirs for ten cents per strand, see Ed.) and threw herself writhing upon the unswept floor of Morrison. Finally your heroic scribe tied Lib up in a pillow case and two shoe strings and with her own ears heard Lib tell this grim story: "Dr. Delano is dead—murdered," screamed Lib. Sure enough, we found Dr. Delano folded up in the kitchen ice box, dead, murdered. Miss Ivey was very disappointed when we insisted on removing the body, as she had planned to serve "A la-Delano" for the special trustee meeting next month.

Anyway, Dr. Delano was a gruesome sight. Her usual chic clothes were wrinkled with the signs of a mighty tussle. Stalks of celery hung from her ears. The cruel instrument which had sealed her fate proved to be a

Lib, crying and eating her fingernails, moaned that she would reveal the murderer on condition that she wouldn't have to take part in May Day. "It interferes with my scholastic work," she stated. On being promised that she could have May Day for special studying, she hissed: "Harriet Tuttle killed Dr. Delano!" On hearing this astounding tidbit, she scurried to find Miss Tuttle. The innocent looking murderer was finally discovered doing a spring dance on Front campus. (Fashion note: she was wearing a delicate garment of pea-green cheesecloth, her head adorned with a small cherry-blossom tree.) On being accused of the ugly affair, Miss Tuttle stopped her gymnastics and shuddered visibly. "Oh Me," she wailed.

Miss Tuttle is now confined to the day student building where she is forced to listen to a constant recording of "Hold Tight." On being asked her reason for committing such a grisly crime, she merely said that for six months she had been madly in love with Adolf Hitler and the strain of Dr. Delano's Spanish had been too much.
