Devotional Thoughts

God's universe is the manifestation of His glory. "The heavens declare the glory of God . . ." This was revealed to me in its greatest splendor I had ever seen last summer while flying from New Orleans to Dallas, ten thousand feet high at sunset. The steward aboard remarked to me that he never tired of this splendor. Captain Eddie Rickenbacker recently wrote an article in Cornet, the title of which is, "I Believe in Prayer", in which he said, "If you have not had an experience of God in your life, my advice is to get busy and get yourself one . . . for this is a sure way to win victories over inner defeat." No better place to have this experience than beholding God's universe.

There is the story of a king who had a favorite jester to whom he gave a beautiful golden bell, and told him if ever he found any one who was a bigger fool than himself, to give that one the bell. Years later the King lay dying, so he asked his jester, to whom he said, "I am going on a long journey and am ill prepared." "Is it an unexpected journey?" asked the jester. "To the contrary replied the king, I have been forewarned these many years, but so engrossing have been the cares of government and pleasures of court that I have given this matter small attention." Whereupon the servant silently handed the King the golden bell, having found a greater fool than himself at last.
