Mrs. Thomas Holmes was in charge of the program. Her subject was, "The High School Goes To War."

She brought out the fact that the American High School today faces its greatest test, it must train a new generation to wage war for the freedom of the world. She listed four tasks of the American High School today.

1. The teaching of the true meaning of our own Revolutionary tradition.

2. To aid youth in discovering the essential pattern of the rise of fascism.

3. To inculcate hatred of fascism without at the same time fostering hatred of the common people of fascist countries.

4. The strengthening of national unity.

In concluding Mrs. Holmes added that it was the high school's war job - to prepare youths to fight for democracy. This war and the peace settlement to follow, will test whether this nation, or any nation concerned in liberty can long endure."

THE LESSON

BY RUTH TAYLOR

Most people talk about the last war as though nothing came out of it. They forget that there was time before the First World War, and that that sanguinary struggle changed their lives completely.

Deot, depression, new quarrels in place of old, broken lives, disjointed relationships, these came out of the war - but so did idealism, awakened social conscience, a broadening of knowledge, of opportunity, a self determination of individuals.

But the real benefit from the last war was the lesson we have slowly learned, and which it has taken this war to bring home. As a man suddenly awakens to the meaning of what he studied as a child, so we as a nation are just coming to realize what we learned in the holocaust a quarter of a century ago - the lesson which, if had we put its precepts into practice, might have given the world a peace lasting long enough to prove the futility of war.

We have learned that patriotism is not measured by power; that love of country thrives on oppression and that a man will fight more zealously for his faith than for his possession.

We have learned that we are not the only people, that there are no Herrenvolk except in their own eyes, that the a ristoeracy among nations consists of those who are willing to take responsibility for protecting the rights of the weak.

We have learned that we can't solve a problem by ignoring it, that what menaces the freedom of some menaces the freedom of all.

We have learned never again to stop a fight before it is won and not to be maudlin with those who come whining for mercy when they are losing, but who are merciless when their side is on top.

We have learned to beware those who never stand on their own actions, but who always seek scapegoats, who always have an alibi ready when they are caught.

We have learned that more powerful than "invading armies" is the power of hope for the future.

We won the battle behind the lines with the Fourteen Points. That we did not win the peace was due not to the cleverness of others but to our own stupidity.

We have learned that no nation liveth unto itself alone - that because we tried to live alone, walking out on the world, we had to pass through a period of distress before we could again have a chance to help establish the kind of world in which we want to live.

A lesson came out of the last war. We have been long in learning it and our education has been costly but we can at least say in the words of Kipling, after another war, "Let us admit it fairly as a business people should. We have had no end of a lesson. It will do us no end of good."
