Both men and women, who are capable of performing academic work of college grade and who are willing to accept employment in war-aital tasks, meet the general requirtments for admission into the courses, Ruggles said. High school graduation or the equivalen in practical experience is the minimum educational requirement, he stated.

The United States Office of Education will defray full cost of the courses approved in the program, and the only cost to students will be for room, board, and textbooks. Living expenses for a 12-week course range from $80 to $120, Director Ruggles estimates.

Courses to be taught include architectural and marine drafting chemical testing and inspection, engineering drawing, and fabric testing and inspection. Classes will run for 12 weeks.

Since the inception of the wartraining phase of the extension program in January, 1941, State College has conducted short courses for 12,011 citizens. Instruction has been given in many subjects ranging from pre-radar
