Controlling Weeds Pasture Problem

The presence of a large number of weeds in a permanent pasture indicates one or two problems, low soil fertility and overgrazing, or probably a combination of the two, says Dr. R. L. Lovvorn, agronomist of the Agricultural Experiment Station at State College.

"Most growers think of controlling weeds in pastures by mowing but there is a much better way," says Lovvorn. "Apply one to two tons of limestone per acre and 500 pounds of 0-14-7 to obtain a good sod. Do not overgraze the pastures during dry weather and keep the animals off the range in early spring until the clovers and grasses are established."

Lovvorn points out that there will be a considerable growth of weeds immediately after the limestone and fertilizer are applied but that they can be kept down by mowings until a good sod is established. He says that a mowing machine bears the same relationship to weed control as headache tablets to a headache.

Growers will need to provide supplementary grazing for early spring and also for the hot, dry periods in summer. Small grains and crimson clover make excellent spring grazing, while kudzu, Sudan grass and lespedeza are good for the summer.

"Weeds compete with the better legumes and grasses for moisture and nutrients, thus reducing the amount of grazing a pasture is capable of providing, and every pasture program should have a definite plan for weed control," Lovvorn says.

With a shield of armor plate and plenty of "fire power" in his horns, the dinosaur Triceratops was a prehistoric model of today's fighting tanks. While dinosaurs lived, millions of years ago, Nature was mellowing and filtering the crude oils used today in refining Sinclair Opaline Motor Oil.

Because it is expertly refined from these mellowed, filtered crudes, then de-waxed and de-jellied by modern methods, Sinclair Opaline will lubricate your motor better, help it last longer. Ask your nearby Sinclair Dealer for Sinclair Opaline Motor Oil.
