The warm weather is finally here. Isn't it wonderful to put on your bermudas and go bare-footed again? Speaking of bermudas, they have a little competition this year. The jump-suit is making the scene. Short pants made right onto the top, zip up the front and make you look as if you're ready for anything. They come in stripes, polka-dots, lacy pastels, and dark, rugged-looking solids. For cooler days and nights, jump-suits are made with long legs to keep you warm. If it's the pantsuit you love, they're cut mini-mannered for a John-John look, in pale, little girl colors. The more conventional bermudas are soft and flowered prints, bold stripes, and plaids.

Beach dresses are empire tents, pant dresses, and shifts. Some of the cutest are white, micro-dotted with navy and red backgrounds. Also on the beach, braids are the rage. Put your own hair up and pin 'em on. If it's too short for that, wear them on your beach hat and make the scene. Sandals by Wee-jun, made in brown leather, actually look much like the loafer.

What's the most flattering frame in sunglasses for you? As a rule, either oval or octagonal looks pretty on almost everyone, but this is a summer for breaking the rules. Round frames, for example, are difficult to wear. But try on a pair and you may find they're absolutely you. The only way to tell what will really be most flattering is to try on lots of different sizes, shapes, and colors. Can't make up your mind? Start a collection. One for indoors, one for outdoors, and one for a rainy day. If you wear sunglasses as a headband, choose a pair made to be worn that way. They hold your hair in place, and are still becoming to your face. If your eyes are blue, tinted lenses do the loveliest things when matched to your eyes. In all the most fashionable circles, there are lenses of palest tint, with skinny thin frames.

Bathing suits are all different. In skimpy bikinis and long-legged suits, the water-babies swim. Daisy-printed and loud striped, they present a wide variety to choose from.

Have you seen the latest papers? They're big scoops for travel and casual wear, so light in weight and price, such fun to show up in, and so easy to throw away. Made by Kimberly-Stevens,
