

How The Proconian Is Published Each Week

Tuesday morning: With the present week's paper not even on the press, Editors Cashion and Carmichael and Advisor Mancini begin plans for another issue.

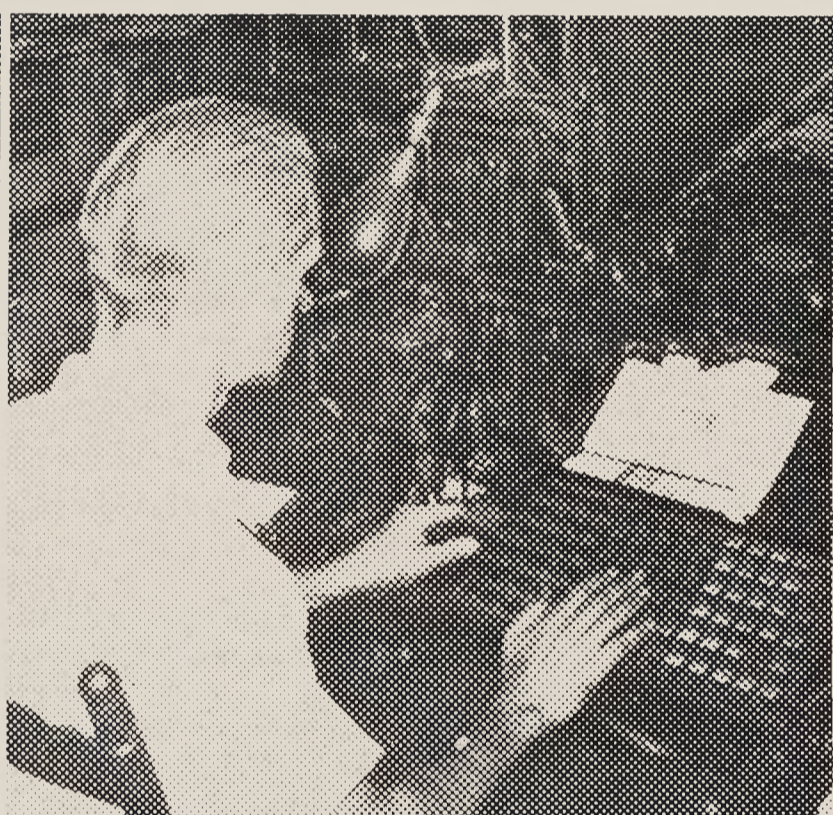

Wednesday morning: Staff meeting is held and assignments are made for the following week's issue. General staff business is also discussed.

Thursday, Friday, and Saturday: Staff reporters and feature writers gather the week's news and put it down on paper. The content of the paper begins to shape up.

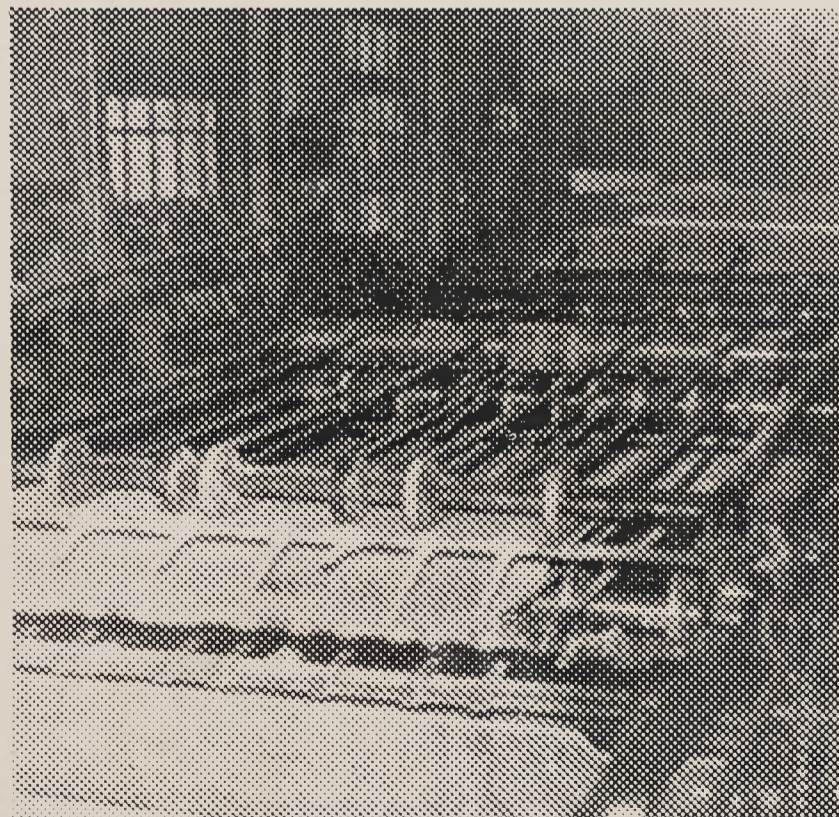

Saturday and Monday mornings: Typists decipher the work of the staff writers and recopy it before it starts its journey to the printshop.

Tuesday: The Orange Printshop takes over as its expert linotypers set up the material that is to be used in the week's issue of the paper.

Tuesday afternoon: The paper begins to assume its final shape as Associate Editor Carmichael and "Stumpy" make up each separate page of the paper.

Wednesday: The paper is placed on the press after it has been proofread and all corrections have been made. This press turns out from 30 to 50 papers a minute.

Thursday morning: The finished paper is folded by an electric folding machine which folds the entire edition of 400 copies in about five minutes.

Thursday morning: The paper finally reaches its readers as Circulation Manager Smith and his staff of assistants deliver it to the home rooms. THE END.
