ROLESVILLE BANK CONSTRUCTION BEGINS

Construction began on Monday for the permanent home of Rolesville's Branch Bank which has been located in the H. E. Perry Store Building since its opening in late April.

The building will be located next to the Rolesville Post Office just off Hwy. 401. According to Robert A. Snow, assistant vice president and manager of the Wake Forest office of the Central Carolina Bank and Trust Co., of which this is a branch, the building is expected to be occupied by October 15th. It will be air-conditioned, heated and will be equipped with three teller windows and a manager's office. There will be ample off-street parking on each side and in back. Construction of the building is being done by C. K. Brown, local contractor.

Stopping by on Monday to watch some of the foundation work was Curtis L. Underwood, manager of the Rolesville office.

with them was Jerry Wilkerson. While there Jerry visited his mother, Mrs. Christine Joyner.

DADDY...

Does your razor run on nuclear power?

Susie may have read about nuclear power in school — how it has made its way out of the laboratory and is now serving people in many ways.

For example, nuclear materials are among the newest of fuels used to produce electricity. And it is possible that nuclear power may be helping run razors for daddies who are CP&L customers.

That's because CP&L is one of four investor-owned electric companies which built and are operating the first nuclear power plant in the Southeast. It's located at Parr, South Carolina, and its purpose is for research. But for more than a year it has been producing electricity, and this power has been flowing into the systems of the four companies.

While it is possible, Susie, that nuclear power may be running your daddy's electric shaver, you can't be sure. Because electricity generated the nuclear way is just like electricity generated in our steam and hydro-electric plants.

This you can be sure about. When we can produce electricity cheaper by using nuclear fuels, CP&L expects to build nuclear generating plants.
