A minor non-injury accident made a believer of Robert W. Hinkle shortly after he came to work in 1951. After dropping something on his foot, he donned safety shoes which he's worn at work ever since. That precaution paid off this August when he dropped a mandrel on his foot. The shoe was ruined, as shown above. At his station in Film Division's Finishing Department at Pisgah Forest, he shows how the 75-pound mandrel landed on his foot. Thanks to the protection of his safety shoe, he didn't receive a scratch.
