the stages including baled straw, refining, paper machine manufacture and finished cigarette paper bobbin. There will be product displays of both Ecusta and Film, in addition to a packaging machine in operation making freezer bags.

Three of the exhibits from Open House are being updated for the Asheville event. These are the pollution abatement table model, enlarged to include secondary treatment of waste water; and the economic impact exhibit and the energy exhibit, both brought up to date to reflect current years.

Attention also will be called to the location safety records and the cooperation from Local 1971 United Paperworkers International in their achievement.

Brenda Long displays some of the trophies she has earned as a member of the Piney Mountain Dancers of Hendersonville. She wears the crown she won as high school dancing queen last summer at Fontana Village following competition in the World Festival of Champions. She was crowned queen on basis of personality, dancing ability and character, and danced individually as well as with the team. She also was first runnerup in clog dancing for her age group. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Braxton Long, her father a draftsman in Ecusta Engineering, and her mother a tester in Ecusta Quality Control.

Tom Helms, right, has added the 80-acre lake complex to the pollution abatement model used at Open House. Rusty Reese of Film Division Maintenance checks measurements for the divider between the sections. Reese is helping prepare the Olin exhibits for the Industrial Trade Fair in the Asheville Civic Center.

Film Division's plant at Pisgah Forest was awarded a plaque in the fourth quarter, designating it as having the best accident prevention program in the Fine Paper and Film Group. The plant represented the Group in recent corporate competition to judge which Olin plant has
