General Huerta was on the point of allowing Madero and Jose Pino Suarez to leave the country today. He was, however, counselled to delay action by close friends, who decided that Madero might use his freedom to hatch new plots.

The provisional President declared he would place the case of Madero Farnum, Milton G. Bejoch and Grant ures. The closest estimates obtainable of the casualties during the fighting in the streets show that about 3,000 persons were killed and 7,000 wounded. In most cases no official records outside the city and burned.

Numerous entire families were wiped out by exploding shells or by machine gun fire. The great majority of the dead were non-combatants, including a large proportion of women and children. These are the days of fugitives. The families of those who stood high in favor with Madero, fearing retaliation, gress. have fled from the city.
