Dr. Rankin's Address. In beginning his address Dr. Rankin stated that this was the second time that he had had the pleasure and privilege of talking to the mayors. The first time he had spoken on methods of diagnosis of health conditions in towns and cities. He took as his subject yesterday the method of treating sickness in municipalities. The first thing to do, he stated, is to have some definite idea as to what we wish to accomplish. Decide on three or four things, and see that they are carried out rather than spread out on a great number, none of which is more than half done.

The first and most important matter is for each city and town to provide some means of knowing its health status. Consult the average citizen, and he will tell you that his is the healthiest town on the map, and yet if you question this closely it stands ten to one that he cannot give you any facts and figures to justify such a belief. Dr. Rankin gave several examples to prove this statement, He said that not long ago he visited a certain town, and asked one of its most prominent citizens as to health conditions, and was told promptly that they were very good. Yet upon investigation he found that there had been 194 deaths the preceding year, or 29 1-2 for each thousand when the average death rate for towns is 15 for each thousand of population. The deaths from consumption in this city were three times the average. In another town where the health conditions were supposed to be ideal he found that the deaths from typhoid were seven times what they should
