ST. FRISCO, STALLION, SETS TWO NEW TROTTING RECORDS

Poughkeepsie, August 31.—Two new world's race records for a trotting stallion were established here today by St. Frisco, driven by E. F. Geers, when he trotted two heats in 2:04 1-4 and 2:01 3-4, defeating Mabel Trask in a special trotting event for a $1,000 purse. His time in the second heat broke the former stallion trotting race record of 2:02, held jointly by The Harvester and Peter Volo. Two heats were the fastest ever trotted by a stallion in a race.

FEDERAL CHILD LABOR LAW HELD UNCONSTITUTIONAL IN DECISION BY JUDGE

 North Carolina, be and the same is hereby denied.

"Second: That the defendant Fidelity Manufacturing Company be and it is hereby permanently enjoined from in any way or manner, by reason of the force of said act of Congress, discharging the minor plaintiff, John London, from its services, or curtailing the employment of the minor plaintiff, Reuben Dagenhart, to eight hours per day.

"Third: That the said William C. Hammer, United States attorney as aforesaid and his successors, assistants, deputies, and agents, be and they are hereby permanently enjoined from in any way or manner, enforcing or attempting to enforce the provisions of the aforesaid act of Congress or any part thereof, and from instituting or causing to be instituted any prosecution or proceedings under the aforesaid statute or any of the provisions thereof."

Go to Supreme Court.
 The case will be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States and persons here tonight interested in the law say that special haste will be made in the presentation of the case on appeal to the highest court for adjudication.

Argument was concluded for the plaintiffs today by Judge W. P. Byrum, of Greensboro, whose chief contention was that the power to close the arteries of interstate commerce to lawful articles of exchange which are not in themselves injurious to public health, morals or safety, is not possessed by Congress.

JUDGE BOND'S DECISION IS CAUSE OF ELATION

Washington, August 31.—Senators and representatives who are in Washington today are elated over the decision of Judge Boyd at Greensboro today declaring the Keating Child Labor law unconstitutional. Senator Overman, one of the strongest supporters of the bill, said tonight that he was surprised at the decision.

"I have always contended, said the senator, that the law would be held unconstitutional. Judge Boyd's decision today confirms the belief I have had at all times."
 Officials of the Department of Justice were visibly disappointed. They had believed all along that the law would be upheld by the courts and only last week sent for District Attorney W. C. Hammer and allowed him additional counsel to defend the case.

Of course, the department will take the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, but in the meantime the old law allowing the children to be worked in cotton mills will be continued. It may take years for the case to get before the Supreme Court, though it is believed the Department of Justice will ask that the case be advanced so that the test case may be disposed of speedily.

The Keating law would never have become a law but for the pressure brought to bear on Congress by President Wilson.

The Keating bill was passed through the House without a dissenting vote except those cast by the North Carolina delegation and those members from South Carolina and two members north of the Mason and Dixon line. The decision of the court today is, therefore, a blow to the vast majority of congressmen and senators who supported the measure.

Representative Webb, of Shelby, was one of the North Carolina congressmen who went the limit against the bill. His argument has always been that the measure was unconstitutional and he delivered a stirring speech to a speech in the House bitterly attacking the measure on the grounds that it was unconstitutional.

LONDON AND ITS COLOR.

(Christian Science Monitor.)
 The color of London has a charm peculiar to itself, which it retains under the most unpromising skies. Gray days are perhaps grayer, and foggy days fogger than elsewhere, but blue days and sunny days enjoy a like distinction. The atmosphere of London is sensitive, taking on color easily, lending itself to the reflection of a summer sky, spinning a web of wonder from a sunset or softening and rounding off every outline with a mantle of fog comes down upon the city. The wonder of the London color is no new discovery, for it has appealed gently and forcibly to poets and artists, as well as to the hundred and one other individuals, who eyes lose its beauty. What a list could be made of its lovers, those who have painted it and praised it down the centuries. Of course, it owes much of its wonder to the Thames, to the breezes that bring the mists up from the ocean with the tides, to wait them over the houses, and much also to the smoke which the mists keep from rising on the windless days, for those are the days when color reaches its zenith.

On windy days and on those other days, clear as crystal, which are among the sharp surprises of the London atmosphere, every detail in the street springs into startling prominence and the people walk in a rare transparency. Then the emblazonment of the omnibus, the fanfare of the big advertisements, the coat of gay paint, used with a lavishness that formerly belonged only to Southern Europe, but conspicuous all over England today upon every door, window box or shading that offers an opportunity, become too evident, and each cornice, spire, tower and chimney raps out sharply on a hard blue sky. The London loses her mystery. Deprived of her silver drapery of mist she no longer presents poetic statements, but clear facts; her sensitive moods are wholly atmospheric; her cadences come with the vapors and haze that drift over the Essex marshes and Epping Forest from the sea.

WHERE DOGS ARE MENACE.

Night Travelers in Macedonia Carry Arms for Protection.

Everywhere are the dogs in Macedonia. In this country of shepherds every peasant's cottage has a moving never fed nor petted so that he feels himself outcast and despised. During this war one ormy and then the other has swept over Northern Macedonia, driving the peasants before them. The roads, their eyes shine in the flare of the electric torch. Every one carries arms in Macedonia at night, not against man, but as a protection against the dogs.

THE RIVER SERETH

The River Sereth, one of the important lines of advance for the Austro-German forces on the eastern front, is described in the following war geography bulletin issued by the National Geographic Society:

"Rising in the Carpathians, 40 miles southwest of Czernowitz, the Sereth is one of the principal waterways of the Austrian crownland of Bukovina. Taking a northeasterly direction from its source, the stream describes a wide loop to a point a few miles below Czernowitz, then, turning to the southeast it traverses the Rumanian province of Moldavia, finally entering the Danube a few miles south of the great commercial and shipping center, Galatz.

"The total length of the Sereth is nearly 350 miles, and it has numerous tributaries from the west, including the Suczawa, Bicritza, Trotus and Milkov, but only the Berlat from the east.

"The Sereth is of peculiar interest from a military standpoint because of the unique defenses, known as the Sereth Line, constructed by Rumania in 1889-1892 at a cost of more than five and a half million dollars. These defenses embrace the principles of a Prussian engineer, Lieut. Col. Maximilian Schumann, who conceived the idea of a system of defenses which would eliminate entirely the necessity for forts and for infantry supports. His reliance was upon the fire of protected guns.

"Rumania adopted the system and put it to the test on the line from which a Russian invasion might be expected. There are three points on the northeastern front where a Russian army could cross the Sereth—the bridge heads at Focshani, Nemolassa and Galatz. The Sereth Line runs from Galatz to Focshani, a distance of 45 miles east and west. Focshani is the most strongly fortified point, with 71 batteries arranged on a semicircular front of 12 miles, a distance of 3,000 to 10,000 yards in advance of the bridge head. The immediate defense of these batteries of quick firing guns and mortars placed in armored cupolas consists of a Russian army, but do not take into account the possibility of an Austro-German enemy.

"All these elaborate and costly defenses are now considered practically obsolete after only 25 years, because there is no provision made for the employment of infantry against the invaders. Furthermore these batteries are so placed as to ward off an attack of a Russian army, but do not take into account the possibility of an Austro-German enemy.

"The Schumann 'armored fronts' system probably never again will be employed to guard the frontiers against invasion. The Sereth Line is a monument to the impractical in war defenses."
