MARY ROBERTS RINEHART'S "It's a Great Life."

Opening a two day engagement at the Grand Theatre today.

ROYAL
Hailed by the critics and motion picture public as one of the finest productions of the current season, George Melford's "Behold My Wife," a marvelous cinema adaptation of Sir Gilbert Parker's internationally popular story, "The Translation of a Savage," opens a three-day engagement at the Royal theatre today and will without doubt be one of the greatest attractions of the season, having been requested by many Wilmington people who saw it during its remarkable New York run a month ago.

The central characters are the aristocratic son of an English family and the simple Indian girl whom he encountered in Canada while he is on business for the Hudson Bay company. Receiving word from the fiancée back in England that she has broken with him because of his family's objections to their marriage, the youth, in a fit of rage, marries the Indian girl and sends her back to England as his wife to disgrace his blue-blooded lineage. Then he proceeds to hit the toboggan in his own way. However, dramatic events work a transformation in both the young Englishman and his bride and the ending is a happy one.

GRAND
Mary Roberts Rinehart, eminent American author, has again done something individual and different. She has admitted that "It's a Great Life," a pen child of hers, is better as a moving picture than it was as a story. Following closely upon the expressions of several well known authors whose novels have been filmed at great cost by picture studios, and who were "surprised," "displeased" or "indifferent" over the results, this frank enthusiasm by one of the country's most popular humorists is decidedly refreshing. A romantic tale of love, with a touch of the fantastic, "It's a Great Life" opens a two-day engagement at the Grand today, and should prove one of the memorable treats of the entire season.

BIJOU
Another one of those rare mid-week treats, another big five-reel super-feature, this time starring William S. Hart, is on deck for Bijou patrons today. They flock to see Bill Hart, and they throng in to see Fairbanks, and it's hard to say which gets the bigger reception at the Bijou on these big all-star Thursday feature days.

William S. Hart will present at the Bijou today what has been pronounced one of his very greatest dramatic treats, "An Apostle of Vengeance," a five-reel picture in which there isn't a single dull moment, and a picture in which there is a story that will keep you gripped for an hour and a quarter.

the Confederate army, being a cavalry officer. He was several times sheriff of Anson county, having held the office about 18 years and giving eminent satisfaction to the people of the county, with whom he was very popular. He was a man of noble and generous impulses, possessing the charm and culture of the old south, and his passing removes one of the finest types of the southern gentleman of the old school.

I heartily recommend these medicines to women who suffer with any sort of weakness."—MRS. W. S. COX, 908 Hanover St. All druggists.

JUSTICE TO FARMER IN STATE ROAD BUILDING

Behooves Him to See That State Takes Over Main Roads

(Special to The Star)
CHAPEL HILL, Jan. 19.—Up to the present time, the counties have been compelled to spend the major portion of their road funds on the main highways connecting the principal cities and towns, which are used largely for commercial purposes. Even with their maximum expenditure of funds and energy on these main roads, they are left in very poor condition.

The great majority of farming class do not receive any direct benefit from these main roads, although they are helping to pay for their construction and upkeep. The average farmer is very vitally interested in the county or secondary roads, which are perforce neglected by the county because it has no funds for both the main highways and the secondary roads. If the county roads were improved, the farmers could reach the main highways with maximum loads and thus derive the fullest benefit from both county and main highways.

By the state's taking over these main highways (5,500 miles) for construction and maintenance, the counties will be relieved of the burden and can use their own road funds for building and maintaining the county roads leading out into the various farming sections and thus give the average farmer a chance at a better transportation system. There are about 47,000 miles of these county or secondary roads and the task of keeping these in good passable condition will require all the funds the counties can raise.

The plan offered by Governor Morrison in his inaugural address to force the counties to pay a portion of the cost of construction of the main highways and all the cost of maintenance, with divided authority as to expenditure, would result in unbusiness-like methods, dissatisfaction, and an even more chaotic state of road building than we have now. Even if the plan were feasible it would only serve to further discriminate against the farmer the funds demanded by the state under this plan for construction and maintenance would not only take all the county roads but would be over-extended to the rural counties, and heavier than which may happen to be heavily in debt.

It is therefore up to every farmer
