Wherever there's a bolted door My thought must enter to explore, Whenever there's a windy sky I watch for Romance to ride by! The moon conveys a hint to me Of shadows shaping into men, Their dark, delicious villainy, And justice clamoring for them. An angle of a lonely street, And I can sense approaching feet Steal through the labyrinths of rain, A face shown, star-like, at a pane Before the night and darkness meet.

A garden with a cloistered sun Infers the cunning hand of Fate, The hidden heart-beats of a nun When love is rapping at the gate, Oh, tangled plots take root in me Like branches of a banyan tree.

I conjure tales eternally From color, setting or perfume, A schooner slipping out to sea, A white horse spectral in the gloom, Red roses on a marble stair, A spider-web of Titian hair.

A spangled slipper at a ball, An envelope, a bar of laughter As silver as a water-fall, A violin, persuasive, after. Strange whispers come on every wind Of passion, gay intrigue or strife-I never know what I may find And stand on tiptoe all my life! -Amanda Benjamin Hall in "Contemporary Verse."
