

TARIFF DEBATE PURELY A GESTURE TOWARD FARMER

Emergency It Aimed to Cure Is Now Incurable, and While Dr. Democrat and Dr. Republican Wrangled Over Prescription, Patient Farmer Died—Eastern Republicans Loath the Bill—Political Bluff All the Way Through.

By MARK SULLIVAN (Copyright, 1921, by The Star) WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—The emergency tariff bill will pass the senate this week. A few Democrats apparently have been seduced by inserting long staple cotton, of which some is grown in this state.

Probably two Louisiana senators will vote for it because Louisiana is a protection Republican state, and the senators from that state are essentially Republicans, although social and political conditions in their state cause them to avoid that label. There is also some apprehension among the Democratic leaders that one or two more other states may desert them superfluously. The Republicans will probably present a fairly united front in favor of the bill.

Those western Republican senators who are most prone to flout party discipline, have, in the present case, the dominating motive of flattering the farmer in their districts by voting for the bill. It is the eastern Republican senators, who compose the political discipline who, in the present case, have the greater temptation to break away. They would break away if they were acting in good faith, if they had the faintest idea their votes would really make the bill a law.

East Not for Bill In fact, in a roll call on favoring protection for long staple cotton, two Republican senators from New Hampshire, Moses and Keyes, voted nay, and such Republican senators as Knox of Pennsylvania, and Dillingham of Vermont took an ambiguous refuge in answering the roll call by saying purely agricultural, and of 16 Republican senators from the manufacturing states of New England, and the east, only one has ever opened his mouth in favor of it.

One or two, like Edge of New Jersey, have even been spoken publicly of the bill as dubious. Nearly all the others privately oppose it. Penrose of Pennsylvania, being the committee chairman of the bill, has gone through the motions of putting it through the parliamentary combat, but only the guileless have any idea that Penrose's motive in so doing is that he is only because of party exigencies. Probably he would never have let the bill come up if he had not been intimidated by the western Republicans who wanted to get on record with speeches in favor of it.

He had to countenance the bill or run some risk of losing his grip on the leadership of the Democratic caucus in Philadelphia on his triumphant return trip to Washington after a year's illness, he was roaring scorn and contempt for this and other pop-gun tariff legislation. When he arrived in Washington, he found he had to bow to the Republican agricultural senators who demanded an opportunity to go on record in favor of the bill. Penrose's early scorn and contempt was shared by everybody who believes in candor and good faith in the public business.

Inspired by Good Faith It is quite true that in early December when the bill was first introduced in the house, it was inspired by good faith. Everybody fell for the distress that had been brought upon farmers by the sensational fall in prices, and there was an honest desire to help them by emergency legislation like this tariff bill, the revival of the war finance corporation, and other efforts.

On this theory, that it was an emergency measure intended in good faith for temporary effect, 41 house Democrats voted for it. They will not vote for it again when it comes before them as revised by the senate. From the day the bill entered the senate, on the 27th of December, Republicans and Democrats alike have treated it as camouflage. The Democrats saw the opportunity to contrast it with Republican campaign promises to reduce the cost of living, and have used it with political skill. The Republicans have used it merely as an opportunity for senators with farming constituencies to make solemn speeches. The Republican leaders never had any intention of making it a law. They could play with it safely, for they knew that Wilson would veto it, and that it would not be passed over his veto, even if it should come back from him in time for that to be done.

Farmer Beyond Aid Meantime, the emergency which the bill was supposed to cure, is no longer curable. The farmers have largely sold last year's crop whose price this bill was supposed to raise. Those crops, so far as they have not been consumed, have gone into the hands of dealers and speculators. Senator McCumber, of North Dakota, made the point that the wheat crop of his state is now largely left the farms. While Doctor Democrat and Doctor Republican wrangled over the prescription, the patient died.

Meantime also, while the senate spent day after day in an old time tariff discussion that they all know would get nowhere, the time has become so short that it will hardly be possible to consider adequately the emergency immigration bill, or any one of several other important bills. Also, in all probability, for the first time in history a congress dominated by the party that prides itself on efficiency will have come to an end without having passed several of the routine appropriation bills.
