

STEAMER BATTLES WITH HURRICANES MORE THAN 30 DAYS

Newa Arrives Here 10 Days Overdue After Thrilling Voyage From Denmark

Ten days overdue, 37 days en route, during which time the vessel battled against a storm lasting over a period of a month, the Danish steamer Newa, from Aalborg, Denmark, reported missing a week ago and later located by wireless off the coast of Bermuda, arrived here yesterday morning, and the 3,200-ton cement cargo is now being discharged at the Wilmington Compress and Warehouse company terminals. The cargo is consigned to the Southern Power Company.

Capt. Arthur Felkenberg, who is in charge of the vessel, reports that the inordinate delay in reaching Wilmington was occasioned by an almost continuous storm at sea, or from December 21 to January 18. He stated that the steamer was not damaged to any extent.

Departing from Aalborg, Denmark, December 16, the Newa sailed at Newcastle-on-Tyne for two days, to have the coal bunkers replenished, leaving the latter port December 20 at midnight. "From that date and until January 18, we did not have a decent day," declared the genial captain yesterday afternoon, in discussing the stormy voyage.

"Please don't exaggerate our experience," the skipper requested, in pre-facing his story to a reporter. "There were heavy seas all during this time, and a strong west wind was blowing, so we were compelled to run at low speed, because the ship was so heavily loaded. It was dangerous to operate the steamer at full speed heading into the big waves," he said.

"As we were so long overdue, I knew there would be anxiety on the part of our families and the company, so I dispatched a wireless message while off the Bermuda islands," Captain Felkenberg said, and this message was picked up by a number of boats. "A message was relayed to Mrs. Felkenberg, who, in turn, advised wives of members of the crew of our safety," he added.

January 20, Charleston wireless for the location of the Newa, which, at that time, was 72 degrees west and 22 degrees north, Capt. Felkenberg reported.

The Newa is consigned to Heide and company, and David H. Scott, general manager of that concern, became apprehensive when the boat was five days overdue. He took the matter up with the navy department, and on the following day the department advised that the Newa had been located off the coast of the Bermuda islands.

Capt. Felkenberg expressed delight on reaching port yesterday, and the 26 members of the crew were also pleased with the opportunity to exchange their sea legs for land legs. The captain and crew spent Christmas at sea, off Land's End, and exchanged greetings with their friends and families.

The skipper's experiences during the war were many, and he had the honor of piloting the first boat that departed from Copenhagen after the outbreak of the war, besides being at the wheel of a Belgian relief ship that sailed from New York city on November 11, 1918. All throughout the war, Capt. Felkenberg was at the helm, and on two occasions his craft came near being torpedoed. At one time his wife discovered a submarine in the North Sea, but Capt. Felkenberg failed to see this undersea monster, and on reaching Copenhagen, a journalist boarded the vessel, requesting a story. The captain was just getting ready to go ashore, so he politely informed the journalist that "my wife saw it; I did not," and the newspaperman afterwards proceeded to weave a story out of this abrupt interview that was widely published. Hence, the captain's request at the beginning of the interview yesterday.

Gertie's Garter Gets Goat of the Glooms

"Getting Gertie's Garter" got Old Man Gloom's goat last night, when the Pickett Stock company presented this farce-comedy for the second time at the Academy of Music, a large number of theatre patrons attending. Everybody laughed loud, and most everybody laughed long, as the story about "Getting Gertie's Garter" was portrayed by an able cast.

Many funny, and some compromising situations are brought about by a woman who is trying to compromise herself, but who incidentally compromises the other members of the cast. But to tell the whole story would be robbing patrons of a few of the laughs, so it is certain that another large audience will attend the matinee at the Academy at 3:30 this afternoon, and the performance at 8:30 tonight.

The Pickett Stock company will offer for the remaining three days of this week, "Lena Rivers," and reserved seats are on sale at Elvington's.
