will be taken out from under its winter wraps and the thud of the ball in the mitt will be the signal starting the 1940 baseball season.

This year it will be the same old story, yet somehow new. On every club in the two major leagues there will be some youngster trying his heart out to break into the big time. And on every club there will be some old timer, who has given his best to the game, who will be playing his last year of baseball.
