Chico, Wilmington's Spider Monkey, Slowly 'Turning Gold'

BY GLADYS BEST TRIPP
 A monkey turning gold should be an extraordinary monkey—and he is, although the gold turning process is perfectly natural. Chico, one-year-old mischief box, belongs to Danny Hartley and lives at 209 Walnut street.

Chico falls in the official category of Spider monkey, a tame variety prevalent in northern South America, and when full grown, his entire coat will have a yellow tint. Now the golden-green color is mostly scattered along his arms below the elbow and down his back.

Six months ago Danny's brother sailing on the S. S. Northern Sword from South America brought the tiny monkey to Danny. In Parramibo he bought him from a native selling them on the streets. Now the brother is a sailor on the Esso Houston plying the waters from New York to B. town and Houston.

Should you see Danny in a downtown store with an odd little toy monkey perched on his shoulder or his arm, don't be a bit surprised to see the bundle of fur come alive and blink his bright black beady eyes at you. Usually when he goes out with Danny, he perches very inconspicuously on his shoulder or near his hand, and remains rigidly still while Danny is busy with groceries for his mother or playtoys. However if you do recognize Chico as being real, and ask Danny about him, you're in for a treat.

"Speak to the lady," Danny will say to the bright-eyed fellow, and Chico will lean your way, still clutching to Danny's arm, and make a queer jabber-j-bber sound. Quite delighted, you'll probably compliment him, and Danny will say to the monkey: "Now whisper in my ear what the lady said to you," and up his arm the little monkey will climb, take his ear in one tiny paw, and jabber-jabber in a low voice directly in the ear. That is Chico performing. At home he's the same type of fellow although a bit mischievous. His abode is a bird cage hanging in the kitchen—but he's rarely there. The entire house is his playground, the curtains his adders to speed up and make faces at any pursuer, the chairs a jumping stand to the next table, the pictures made to cling to.

With a two-inch head, a seven-inch body, and tail 12 inches long, the little fellow makes quite a picture dangling from every imaginable object. He is fond of Danny and follows him wherever he crosses the room. He seems most happy when Danny plays with him, and quite gleefully climbs his own tail when Danny holds it by the tip. Then he does a back flip from Danny's hand and lands on his feet.

Danny is in the Sixth grade at school. His dog comes in for his share of the fun too, for he and Chico are great playmates. Chico rides his back holding on to his collar. They tumble playfully on the floor, and when the family goes of leaving them both loose in the house, often Chico and the dog are sleeping side by side on the foot of the bed when they return.

The sugar bowl is his weakness. Hide it where they may, Chico hunts until he discovers it. The day I was there, the sugar bowl had been left on the table since Chico was supposedly safely shut up in the bird cage. Of course, when Danny turned him out, he went directly for the sugar. Danny scolded him, and Chico took to the curtains.

By the time Danny turned his back, the little paws were dipping in the sugar again and hastily going to his mouth while his bright eyes were slyly watching his master's movements. Danny shooed him off again, and since, at the time he was busy looking for a picture of his brother, hid the sugar dish in the folds of the table cloth. By the time we could look for Chico again, all visible monkey was a long curling tail protruding from the table cloth folds. The sugar bowl was rescued again, this time to be safely put in a cupboard.

Chico likes rubber, too. Danny's brother also brought several rubber ornaments from South America including an Indian canoe with skillfully molded Indian: rowing the boat. Chico takes great delight in pulling the small rubber feathers from their headresses and chewing them. Danny says pretty soon those Indians won't be wearing feathers.

Probably the nicest thing about Chico is his 4 tendrils. Far removed from the biting and scratching variety, he nonchalantly sits in your hand, or on your head, as the notion suits him. Or he'll shake hands with you in the tiny paw just large enough to encircle one finger. Danny's got something there!

Quiz Program Held At Rotary Luncheon

Rabbi M. M. Thurman, January program chairman of the Rotary club, yesterday announced that George Sokolsky will address the club at next week's meeting. Sokolsky, who is on the Community Forum program next Tuesday night, is to arrive in Wilmington in time to discuss the major events of the day before the
