'Laydown Hand' Fails to Make Slam BY WILLIAM E. MCKENNEY America's Card Authority After seeing today's hand played in the Masters Individual tournament, someone remarked, "There is hope for all of us." Here is a hand with 14 winners—six spade tricks, the ace and king of hearts, five diamond tricks and the ace of clubs. That is 14, not counting the fact that the jack of hearts finesse will establish two more heart tricks. But at the nine tables not one pair reached a grand slam, and at two tables they failed to bid even a small slam. But here is the pay-off—only one player managed to make 13 tricks, and that player and his partner had only bid three no trump on the hand. The bidding shown is the way it went at several of the tables. And those who did reach six spades made this colossal play—they led a small spade to dummy's queen and when South played the jack, they led the deuce of spades from dummy and finessed the nine-spot. Don't gather from this series of articles that all of the play in the Masters Tournament was bad. Next week I will give you six hands played by the winner, Harry J. Fishbein of New York. Highest crest in the birth rate of the United States may be reached about 1960.

Medical Care

"Food will win the war and food will dictate the peace." This pronouncement of Secretary of Agriculture Wickard has undoubtedly a great deal of historical wisdom and acumen behind it. Modern historians get pretty far away from the influence of individuals such as Hitler and Mussolini on the determination of history. They are inclined to credit other forces with the changes in empires, the origin of wars, the migration of peoples. It is not difficult to find illustrations of the fact that a nation or a culture can develop only when or where a sufficient supply or surplus of food becomes available. There was never a great outburst of art and literature—at least a systematic outburst—in a starving country. Leisure is necessary to develop the arts, and for leisure a good food supply is necessary.

Fate Sealed by Banquets At the same time, if culinary art is the only one which is developing in a country, it may lead to quite as serious consequences as if there were no food at all. Thus we find physiologists stating that the Roman banquets probably sealed the fate of the Roman Empire, and in our own day the French cuisine, the French food and wine may have been factors in the fall of France. In short, too much food and too much catering to the appetite can ruin an empire just as surely as they ruin an individual.

As a corollary to this, I find some curious comment made by Dr. Frederick Hoelzel of the Department of Physiology, University of Chicago. He thinks that two cultures which have enjoyed the longest continuous history without serious interruption, such as the cultures of India and China, depended partially at least on a relatively steady state or balance between the supply and the use of food. In World War I German resistance cracked partly because of undernourishment due to the food blockade, and shortly after that Russia came close to complete collapse because of famine conditions in that country.

Effect of Starvation Periods Dr. Hoelzel's most curious and stimulating suggestion concerns the effect of starvation periods on mental and physical vigor after the starvation period is over. He has had a personal experience of 600 days of fasting during the past 33 years and he believes that the most striking after-effects of fasting or food restriction occur between the ages of about 25 and 35. He believes that this would possibly mean that the great vigor of the German and Russian military campaigns would manifest itself in those of about 40 to 60 years of age and therefore men now in active control—men who had the experience of starvation or semi-starvation in the days of World War I.

It is true that every physiologist who has ever observed starvation has found a great manifestation of physical and mental vigor when re-alimentation occurs after periods of fasting and a food restriction.

Expecting a Baby?

Mother's Friend helps bring ease and comfort to expectant mothers. MOTHER'S FRIEND, an exclusively prepared emollient, is useful in all conditions where a bland, mild anodyne massage medium in skin lubrication is desired. One condition in which women for more than 70 years have used it is an application for massaging the body during pregnancy... it helps keep the skin soft and pliable... thus avoiding unnecessary discomfort due to dryness and tightness. It refreshes and tones the skin. An ideal massage application for the numb, tingling or burning sensations of the skin... for the tired back muscles or cramp-like pains in the legs. Quickly absorbed. Delightful to use.

tion. However, it seems doubtful to me that these effects would begin to manifest themselves 20 years after the starvation period, and I suspect that the maintenance of the even level of American nutrition for the last 40 years will result in just as much military vigor as that manifested by the Russian and German armies.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS P. R. W.—I would like to ask your opinion on the subject of bathing during pregnancy. Should one bathe regularly during the entire confinement? Answer: Yes. The skin performs important functions of excretion during pregnancy and should be kept clean in order to make it efficient. Toward the end of the term a sponge bath is all that is necessary.

Dutch Army Officers Released To Prison

LONDON, May 16.—(AP)—German authorities in the Netherlands have thrown back into prison all regular officers and cadets of the Dutch army heretofore on "parole" and have arrested 460 prominent civilians on charges of sympathizing with or aiding "conspirators against the occupying power," the Dutch news agency Aneta reported today. Aneta quoted the German-controlled radio in the Netherlands as saying the officers re-imprisoned numbered 2,000 and that their arrests were taken as a precaution against such conspiracies as that for which the Germans this week executed 96 Netherlands. Those 96 were accused by the Nazis of leading a secret organization preparing for an Allied invasion of the Netherlands. A number of them were army officers, and as a result the German occupation command cancelled the parole arrangement by which most Netherlands officers were released in 1940.

This is a Factory It is shut down. The raw materials it used are needed for war products.

This is a Workman He is keeping the factory machinery in shape until it can produce again.

This is a Trade Mark For years, consumers looked for it when they bought the product of the factory. It is worth more to the manufacturer than his factory.

This is a Newspaper Advertisement

Like the workers who keep the plant from falling apart through disuse, advertisements like this keep the trade mark's good will alive until the manufacturer can return to normal production. Then the plant can re-employ its men and you can again buy its products that you have been missing—products of good value and low cost that are made possible by newspaper advertising.
