CHAPTER THIRTY-TWO Tommy supposed, since things did seem to be perking up, with Tibby suddenly, unaccountably being nice to him, that he ought to be willing to continue to let Steena manage her campaign. If she had a plan, however, he wished she would tell him what it was. "Why not let me in on it?" he suggested. Steena was evasive; she said, as she had before, just to leave everything to her. She assured him that if he did, everything would work out smoothly for each of them. Tommy had to be satisfied with that, although he actually was not. He was like a race horse at the post, eager to be off, keyed to fever pitch. He wanted to race to the finish, which, of course was Tibby. He wanted to clear matters up with her. But he supposed that Steena, being so clever, knew best. He did not really believe that Tibby was jealous just because he had been sending Steena flowers and pretending to give her a rush. He supposed, rather, that Tibby wondered what had come over him, why he was behaving so unnaturally. Still the fact remained that Tib had changed, that she had gone out of her way to be nice to him. He felt he ought to show her, by some small gesture, that he appreciated that, how much it meant to him. The next time the florist's boy delivered flowers there were two boxes, the usual long one with red roses addressed to Steena, and a smaller one addressed to Miss Elizabeth Lane. These last Tommy had paid for himself, because naturally he did not want to charge them to Steena's account. "Violets!" Tibby exclaimed, lifting the fragrant, dewy blossoms from waxed paper. "Imagine violets at this time of year!" They reminded her of the springs she had gone walking with Tommy in the woods back home in search of the first wild flowers. Was that why he had sent them? To remind her of those other springs, to tell her that they might come again one day, that everything, even friendship, was not over between them? "Wasn't it nice of Tommy?" Steena said, although she did not think it nice of him at all, not when he had promised to leave everything up to her. "I told him I was sure you liked violets," she added. That was only a very white fib; Tibby could draw her own conclusions from it, however. Everything was fair in the game Steena had to play. The stars in Tibby's dark eyes faded; the brief lift of happiness left her heart. If Steena had told Tommy to send the violets, as she must if she had suggested what flowers to send, they did not have any meaning. "You see," Steena hurried on, since this seemed an excellent opening if she were to try to carry out the plan she had, "it's all right mixed up, you and Tommy having been such friends, but you know you said, Tibby, that you didn't mind if I went out with him. I hope you won't mind what I'm going to tell you now." Steena's plan was still a bit vague, but she knew the time had come to do something drastic, to stir Wayne up and to make Tibby realize it was Tommy she apparently cared for. "I shan't mind," Tibby said. She

United Nations Air Training Conference Concluded At Ottawa

OTTAWA, May 22.—(AP)—Representatives of 14 of the United Nations concluded a five-day air training conference here today with an announcement that a United States-Canadian-British committee on training in North America would be established in Washington and that other important results of the discussions must be kept secret. A communique announcing the committee plan said a public report would be made, dealing only with proceedings at the first plenary session and with general description of the conference work, while a secret report on conclusions of special committees will be issued only to the governments concerned. The advisory committee, which will have a United States representative as chairman, will serve as liaison among such nations as China, Poland, Norway and the Netherlands, which have air training programs in North America, whenever questions of interest to them arise. LAND VS. WATER Area of the earth consists of 139,440,000 square miles of ocean and 4,575,000 square miles of land, on which latter are approximately 1,000,000 square miles of river and lake surface. Owing To Conditions Beyond Our Control

Clapper Says:

(Continued from Page Four) putting everything into the war funnel and it looks as though we are certain to come through on the production side if the present high pressure for doing the impossible continues. We have done what was considered the impossible in some production jobs and there will be more of it if the heat is kept on. Administration concern is passing now into the matter of using all of this, and using the American Army, part of which is completely trained and equipped and ready for use. The Lend-Lease phase is over—that is, the phase of sending materials for others to use. The emphasis is shifting now to use of those materials on the fronts by our own forces. In other words we are entering into the full combat phase, not overnight, but during the coming weeks and months. It will show most clearly probably in the air, and could lead to domination of the air over Europe by the Allied side this year. Once air superiority is established, then the way is cleared for the ground follow-up which would bring the climax of the war.
