Mary Baldwin College Will Note Centennial, Local Women To Attend

STAUNTON, May 29.—Several hundred of Mary Baldwin college's distinguished alumnae from 48 states and several foreign countries will gather in Staunton, Virginia, June 3 through the eighth. They will celebrate the attainment of one hundred continuous years of academic service to the young women of the nation.

The Centennial celebration of historic Mary Baldwin college was launched October 4, 1941 at the traditional celebration of its Founder's birthday. One hundred years ago Dr. William Rufus Bailey started a "female seminary" at Staunton, Va., and from that small beginning on a side street of this historic old town in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, it self more than two hundred years old, the school has grown to be a fully-accredited college and has spread over quite a portion of the center of the city. One of the greatest periods of growth and development was under the guidance of Miss Mary Julia Baldwin, for whom it was named in 1895.

Among the Mary Baldwin alumnae from Wilmington planning to attend the celebration will be Mrs. Bradley Wootten, Miss Lucilla White and Miss Mary Borden Wallace.

WEDDING PLUS DINNER DRESS
Even the bridal gown is a double-duty dress in warm-ime, and here's one which will serve the young matron for many formal parties in summer and winter. Gloria Rumatz, a fashion student, designed it. The material is chalk-white rayon crepe. When worn as evening gown, pictured at left, the gown has its detached sleeves pushed down like long gloves, and the drape crosses over in front and falls softly over shoulder. This drape is swept down and around in back to form a train, sleeves are smoothed over, bertha is added — and there, when the traditional veil is added, is the bridal costume, shown at right. You'll Need A Sense Of Humor If You Become A Soldierette

By RUTH MILLETT
NEW YORK, May 29. In the list of qualifications for women who will be taken into the women's army there is no mention of a sense of humor being essential.

Nevertheless, it's a quality needed by the girl who wants to join up. For it's going to take America some little time to get used to having women in the army. Where the idea is still new, it's going to call for a lot of razzing. "Taking it" may be one of the feminine volunteers' hardest jobs.

That uniform, for instance, it's likely to inspire whistles for a while, until its novelty has worn off.

And families aren't going to take the girl volunteer quite as seriously as they take their sons who are getting into uniforms. Can't you just hear kid brothers all over the country saying, "Cut it out, Sis. Ever since you started wearing that uniform you have been trying to act like a top sergeant."

For a while every other humor cartoon will have a girl in uniform in it, and radio comedians will get their laughs at the expense of the women's army.

That's the way it will be for a while, and the girl whose sense of humor isn't as broad as her mind is long won't enjoy it.

So, if you can't take a little kidding, young ladies, you had better stick to teaching school or working in a beauty shop.

At least you had better wait until the country gets used to having its women as well as its men in uniform. It won't take long. And, when the laughs have subsided, the wonder will probably be that we never had women, uniforms and all, in the army before. That's the way it is whenever women try something new.

Spotlight Boys Turn On The Heat

Editor's Note: We asked some of our most dazzling male celebrities to comment on women's fashions and makeup. Here's the result:

FRED ALLEN (Stage, Screen, Radio): "In this open-toed, wedgy-wacky world, nothing I could say about women's fashions or makeup would help the sartorial nightmare. A battalion of men could shout protests 24 hours a day in 4-hour shifts over every radio station in the country and the girls would continue to paste on thread eyebrows, celluloid fingernails and silk fringe eyelashes with all the enthusiasm of a man sticking one-cent stamps on a ten-dollar parcel post package."

GUY LOMBARDO (Orchestra Leader): "I think tall women should dress 'tall'—wear high hats with tall feathers if they feel like it and high-heeled shoes. If short women try to look tall and vice versa—which seems to be the theory of some style writers—they'd all end up looking alike, and that would be monotonous."

TED HUSING (Radio Star): "I think there's a place for both the suave and the simple in feminine fashions. Simplicity during the day—sophistication at night. Summer prints with small hats or calots are attractive for daylight. By the same token, makeup should be sparing in daylight hours—daring at night."

FREDDIE MARTIN (Orchestra Leader): "I'll be honest, I've only become fashion-conscious since I started my engagement at the swank Waldorf—Astoria. One change I've noticed is a trend toward simplicity, less frills on hats, dresses and shoes. Of course I think it's important for women to look their best these days, and the new styles add rather than detract from their appearance."

BOB HAWK (How'm I Doing?): "If women would dress to please men instead of vying with each other, they'd be a lot more attractive. Men like simple clothes that show off carriage, poise and figure! We don't like a lot of frills and folderol that give a girl a figure nature never intended."

MARK WARNOW (Orchestra Leader): "If it's red, it's in the fashion groove for me. From what I've seen, today's styles seem highlighted with torrid colors. Maybe it's the South American influence, maybe it's just that the ladies, bless 'em, are all out for morale-boosting and realize that bright colors are as good a way as any to lift the spirits."

PHIL BAKER (Comedian): "This freezing order on women's clothes leaves me cold! Do they mean to say that we've got to keep looking at the same goopy headgear the girls are wearing this spring for the duration? And what about those slacks, without enough slack to 'em? Of course, the skirt length is another matter—go on, ask me what I think about that. That's the $64 question."

OLE OLSON (Sons O' Fun): "I like more femininity and less masculinity in a woman."

LOU HOLTZ (Stage - Screen Comedian): "I don't like a woman with a run in her stocking and I like 'em better in riding habits than any other costume."

WILLIAM GAXTON (Broadway and Hollywood): "I don't like them in slacks and I like them in negligees."

VICTOR MOORE (The Timid Soul of Comics): "I would like to be sure it's a woman when she's walking down the street. I don't like short skirts on long women."

EDDIE DAVIS (Night Club Owner): "I don't think any girl can look like a fashion plate in a hat that looks like a blueplate. I like slacks on women like Katherine Hepburn but I don't like them on women like Mae West. Girls with curves look anything but neat when they retreat in trousers."

JACK DEMPSEY (Fistic Restaurateur): "Good colors, good lines, clothes so simple and smart they take on the personality of the wearer. The kind of clothes that make you say 'What a pretty girl!' rather than 'What a pretty outfit!'"

EZRA STONE (Henry Aldrich): "I like my gals feminine, prefer fluffs and trills to uniforms. Maybe that's because I see so much of it in the Army and it's a relief to see a pretty girl dressed in completely feminine clothes."

The SEAMY Side Of Life

Wide World Features
If you want to keep your boy friend looking your way or keep the husband happy, gals, just take these two beauty tips: Keep your stocking seams straight and your nose powdered.

All the other contraptions, gadgets, paints, wires, brushes, mops, springs, coal tar products and whatnots are apt to annoy him more than amuse him.

Of course, a little is okay. But just take it easy. Remember, the Indians used to put on the war paint too, and look what happened to the Indians.

So, if you want to get your man—and hold him—lend a pearly ear and bright eye for a minute.

Honestly, now, would you like to pucker up and find yourself in a crouch with a combination drug-store counter, chalk mine, grease gun and paint company testing ground?

But since you're still going to do what you've always done, anyway, don't do it while said boy friend is in spoggy range. If you want to see his bright smile fade and that youthful twinkle vanish, let him catch you with a mudpack on, while the curlers are in, or make with the mascara or lipstick on the sofa. First thing you know, he'll be talking about the weather.

Also, don't ask him whether he likes the way you're fixed up. You weren't born yesterday, sister.

And besides, why go making fights? And brother, if you're listening,

Fruits Make A Good Substitute For Sugar-Consuming Desserts

By MRS. GAYNOR MADDOX
NEA Service Staff Writer
The June bride should realize that plenty of fresh fruit in the diet—always important—is particularly so in war time. It supplies needed vitamins and minerals and helps you do without sugar. Fruits add sweetness to the menu, and is a healthful substitute for rich, sugar-consuming desserts.

Surprise your guests with a large platter, arrange on lettuce leaves mounds of fresh fruit sections of contrasting colors—slices of bright red-skinned apples, fresh pineapple cubes, ripe unshelled strawberries, grapefruit sections, melon balls. GARNISH with watercress. Let each guest help himself and have the pleasure of "creating" his own individual fruit plate.

Cheese Is Rich in Vitamins
Cottage cheese balls are a welcome addition to the platter. Roll them in chopped pecans or walnuts if you prefer, mix the cottage cheese with chopped dates. This cheese is rich in proteins and minerals.

The serve yourself fruit plate has many possibilities. Use it as an appetizer. Serve it as a salad with a tangy dressing, or with whipped cream mayonnaise (half whipped cream, half mayonnaise). As a dessert, serve it with honey or whipped cream on the side.

Here's a French dressing that's particularly good with fruit salad:

French Dressing
One tablespoon salad or olive oil, 1-2 tablespoons vinegar, 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, 1 teaspoon powdered sugar, 2 teaspoons tomato catsup, 1-2 teaspoon salt, 1-4 teaspoon mustard.

Chatham Prison Camp Inmates Go On Strike

RALEIGH, N. C., May 29.—(AP)—Inmates of the Chatham county prison camp refused to leave their cells this morning in a protest against food, recreation privileges and overwork, penal director Oscar Pitts said today.

Pitts went to the camp and persuaded the men to return to their work, promising a personal investigation of their grievances.

The ringleaders of the strike, Pitts said, stationed themselves at the exits of the cell blocks and urged all of the 96 men not to go to work as a protest against the conditions to which they were subjected.
