CHAPTER TWENTY-NINE

Luncheon was eaten very swiftly, it seemed to Barbara. She ate warm fruit cocktail, tepid tomato soup and rubbery steak as if it were her last meal on earth, tasteless but necessary to attaining another world, and then, having wrapped herself in a kind of protective coma, realized that the waiters were pouring coffee, that the room was blue with smoke and Howard Temple was on his feet introducing her.

Get up Bow. Fix your eyes somewhere in space and begin. That was the formula. She got over the first three parts as she had practiced at home, but when the speech began, it was not the speech that she'd learned.

From far away—a whole planet it seemed—she heard her own voice beginning: "From the first day that I came to South Wintridge a few years ago, I wanted to be an integral part of it." . . . Other phrases came. . . . "The beginning of any relationship, whether it is to be a personal or a business one, must be based on reciprocity. . . . Not what you sell or buy, but what you give to each other equally. . . . There is no such thing as a small town in business. Everything is in ratio. . . . Wherever you find success you find those who want and those who serve. . . . The secret of successful American community life is based on this simple principle. . . . Phrases she had not known she meant to say went together into a speech that had a ring of truth and utter conviction.

Thunderous applause, of which she was only dimly conscious, filled the room. She was wondering if her nose was as shiny as it felt.

Once more, with the aid of watery knees, she got to her feet, smiled a glazed smile, and sat down.

The next speaker was introduced and gradually her mind began to function and her body felt once more as if it belonged to her.

She reached for a glass of ice water and lifted it to her lips, allowing her glance above it to rim sweep the room.

Directly across from her she saw Tom Kilcran.

He was looking at her. She meant to nod and that would be all. But she smiled and saw his smiling answer, after which fleeting exchange she turned to Howard Temple to ask for a light for her cigarette.

Temple said something to her about how did it feel to be a businesswoman.

She told him that it was very nice, all except "making speeches and going to the bank for a loan." Nervousness made her bring the latter up; she hadn't meant to at all.

Temple looked at her anxiously. "You're not going to hold that against us, Mrs. Wister? You come in any time now and I'm sure you'll find us co-operative."

The men were getting up at the other tables. Barbara drew on her gloves. She looked up.

Tom Kilcran was weaving his way through the tables, coming toward her with unmistakable direction in his progress.

If there'd been one other woman in the room, she would have snapped her vanity open and powdered her nose, but a fine thing it would be to do that just because Tom Kilcran was coming to her side. Was there—

BRAZIL'S ENERGY GIVEN TO VICTORY

Military Attache To U. S. Declares Country Wants Peace And Freedom

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—Brigadier General Amaro Soares Bittencourt, Brazilian military attache to the United States, said today his nation had dedicated its resources and energies to bringing victory for the common cause of freedom.

Speaking on an Army hour broadcast, the general was introduced by Major General J. Garesch Ord, chairman of the joint Brazil-United States defense commission. Ord said that this country was joining tomorrow in the celebration of Brazil's Independence day.

The text of the Brazilian official's speech follows:

"We of Brazil are pleased that the people of the United States are joining in the celebration of the anniversary of our Independence day.

"Over one hundred years ago, your great leader, Thomas Jefferson, prophesied the union of our respective countries to preserve liberty on this continent. Today, we of Brazil are not thinking merely in terms of what sacrifices we will have to make. Our every thought and act is concentrated on the task of defending the principles of freedom which are the foundation of both our free and sovereign nations.

"In fighting on the side of the United States, we dedicate our physical resources and moral energies to accomplish victory for our cause."

No Grounds For Belief In Enemy Landings On West Coast Of U. S.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 6.—There is no ground for belief that any enemy landings were made from submarines or other vessels in the Santa Barbara, Calif., area last night, the western defense command and fourth army said today.

Military and civilian defense authorities were placed on full alert in the area last night following a report that a submarine had surfaced close to shore.

The joint WCD and fourth army statement today said:

"It has been established after investigation that there is no ground for belief that any landings were made in the Santa Barbara area from enemy submarines or other vessels last night."

There was no elaboration.

56 Survivors Of Ship Land After Nine Days

LISBON, Sept. 6.—After nine days and nights on rough seas 56 survivors of the American tanker Jack Charles landed today in the Azores from a small lifeboat. Another lifeboat with 28 men was reported missing.

Crewmen said the tanker was torpedoed by a German submarine Aug. 28 some 300 miles from the Azores.

The survivors said their boat was so overcrowded they had to catch catnaps leaning against each other. They landed above Vilanoa, Angro De Heroismo Island.

(Lloyds shipping register does not list a Jack Charles.)

MOLOTOV NEICE MARRIES NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—Esther Carp of Bridgeport, Conn., 28-year-old niece of Soviet foreign minister V. M. Molotov, was married today to Leo Seligman, 31, Bridgeport war factory employe.

The bride's father is Sam Carp, Bridgeport real estate man who formerly headed a corporation engaged in partly in the purchase of warships for the Soviet Union in this country.

Carp's sister is the wife of Mol-
