Watching battlewise sergeants and corporals tell new men about the tricks of German booby-trap experts or the way to distinguish the sound of a German machinegun, it seems they have been teaching all their lives. They know how serious it is and their students pay strict attention. McNarney, in dedicating the center pointed out that 1,600,000 men already have been discharged from the Army and said the number of physically fit young men in the States not in war jobs is being depleted."

In addition to the standard use of infantry weapons subjects taught at the school include mines and boobytraps, mortars, close combat, infiltration, village fighting, concealment and camouflage, taking fortifications, operation of patrols, attack practice tactics against crowds and mobs, patrols and patrolling a captured town and "crack and thump."

"Crack and thump" is a course in which infantrymen are taught to judge the approximate position of an enemy by listening to the crack of his gun and the thump of the bullets arriving.

In the infiltration course the infantrymen must crawl 100 yards with full equipment, hugging the ground to avoid continuous bursts of machinegun fire over head. Every minute or two a half pound stick of TNT blows up in some part of the field to simulate an enemy shell. At the end of the course is a ditch from which the tired soldiers must dash to bayonet a stuffed bag 25 yards beyond. Sergeant Hilary Hanify, New York City, a tough antiaircraft gunner with 16 months service over seas in Sicily, North Africa and Italy, came in first as General McNarney watched and wasn't even breathing hard. Secretary of War Stimson sent

McNarney congratulations on the ledication of the center and said: "To speed the victory it is now vital that every man should serve where he is most needed."
