Prop Wash

German military ingenuity reaches a peak in the windmill kite fitted to U-boats, one of the most extraordinary gadgets of the war. Of more value to Japanese submarines working in the spaces of Pacific than to Germans working—as they have at late—Close to the shores of England, it was brought out about a year ago. At least one has been captured.

It is a collapsible, man-lifting autogiro kite, consisting of an observers chair to which is attached a lifting rotor. A control stick is in front of the chair. It is not a helicopter because there is no motor. The rotor is turned by the movement of air past it. After the U-boat has surfaced, the kite is assembled. Armed with binoculars, the observer takes his place and after rotor speed has been worked up enough, lets himself up at the end of a steel cable which carries telephone wires. On most days there would be enough wind to fly the kite but if it were calm, it could be operated by heading the submarine into whatever wind there was.

The kite gives a submarine a much greater range of vision. Coastal Commander of the Royal Air Force, however, has found the Schnorkel ventilating shaft, which allows the U-boat to remain under the water for long periods a more serious trouble. The windmill kite does, nevertheless aid U-boats greatly in spotting their quarry.

SHRUBBERY THEFT IS INVESTIGATED

The alleged theft of shrubbery from Bellevue cemetery by three Negro boys was under investigation yesterday by juvenile authorities.

The boys, aged 8, 10 and 12, were apprehended by sheriff's officers, who said the trio had been selling the shrubs, some of their large plants, for 75 cents each to persons residing at Princess Place. The value of the stolen shrubbery, some of which was said to be planted now in the yard of a home at Princess Place, could not be estimated by sheriff's deputies. However, it was said that the boys admitted receiving between $16 and $18 for the plants.

Officers said they apprehended the trio after a Princess Place housewife reported to them that the boys were selling the plants "at such cheap prices."
