Preclamation Not Expected To End Fighting In Reich

mountainous southern American and Russian arms

Both present the drab prospect of long and bitter campaigning. In the north, besides the portsalways stubbornly defended by the Germans-there is flooded western months to clean out

The same is true of the southern retreat, a mountain-bound natural ortress which, if the Nazis could old out through the fall, would be made doubly formidable by the snow and ice of the mountain

It is not suggested that the Gernans will be able to turn southern fermany into the fortress the Nazis ing the end near even faster than the Germans calculated.

Just when the Allied victory roclamation will come after the ie hards are shoved into their last orners will depend upon the exent to which the German fighting force is broken down in the process.
