

SCRIBE ADVISES TENT FOR TRIPS

(Continued from Page One) He was telling me! The first hotel I tried in Savannah was a modest establishment chosen in the hope that accommodations would create no strain on the travel budget.

The seventh, and last approached before we slunk out of town, was a gilded caravanserai where I pleaded in reckless desperation "Not even a bridal suite!"

The journey north from Savannah was punctuated by stops at every tourist camp ("Good heavens, we rent the cabins by the month now!") and tourist home ("Sorry, we were filled up at four o'clock this afternoon.") That showed a light.

Discouragement was complete in Walkerboro. The clerk shook his head and motioned toward a darkened corner: "There are our last arrivals."

Two men, snugly bedded down on lobby couches, were snoring out a basso due.

Shortly after dawn, 35 miles south of Raleigh, N. C., we ran out of gas—in front of a gas station, fortunately. Head on steering wheel, I snoozed for an hour before the attendant arrived. It was the only respite in 1,400 miles between Miami and New York. Then I slept two days.

On the return trek to Miami, hotel hunting started around mid-afternoon. I hunted lobbies, consulted policemen, inquired at drug stores.

"Lady, I couldn't tell you where to find an empty easy chair, much less a bed," said a restaurant cashier at Rocky Mount, N. C. "To-bacco sales are on. The town's booked solid."

The 36 consecutive hours of driving southward was broken by a 15-minute nap in front of a Daytona Beach, Fla., drug store. Who cared about lodgings then? After all, it was a comparative stone's throw—250 miles—to Miami.

Powley, union president, as saying that at the last negotiations conference this afternoon the companies questioned authority of the bargaining authority of the bargaining committee (headed by Powley) to represent the membership, "after having rejected all wage demands of the union."

"Because of disrupted communications," NBC said, "it was impossible to determine the exact effect of the walkout. NBC said its service was being received in Washington, Chicago and Denver but had no reports from other cities."

AIRPORT PROGRAM GETS SENATE O. K.

(Continued from Page One) after adoption of an amendment by senator Taft (R-Ohio) trimming the Federal authorization from $10,000,000 a year to $75,000,000.

Sixty-five per cent of the money would be apportioned for smaller airports and 35 per cent for larger ones in city areas. All the Federal money would be channeled through the state governments. If the House upholds the Senate in allowing only $75,000,000 a year, instead of $100,000,000, a complete new survey of construction needs must be made, a CAA spokesman said today.

DRAGON SOCIETY TO BE DISSOLVED

(Continued from Page One) The other two Black Dragon members marked by MacArthur for arrest were Toyosaburo Kikuchi and Prof. Genchie Kato. Japanese sources reiterated that while the Black Dragon had many adherents, other patriotic societies out stripped it in influence in recent years.

It was instrumental in setting Japan upon the path of conquest, however, and its assassins terrorized any Japanese official offering the mildest opposition to aggressions.

Hashimoto long was known as a Jingo. He was named by the Japanese as the officer who ordered pilots to bomb the gunboat Panay, which was loaded with Americans.

The bombing put a severe strain on American and Japanese relations. The Tokyo government attempted to apologize and claimed that its war office had never authorized such an attack. After the attack, Hashimoto retired from the Army. He returned to prominence in 1940 as a leader of the Japanese youth movement patterned after the Nazis.
