(AP)— To get a railway ticket to certain places, travelers in this minor branch line transfer point some 50 miles Northwest of Tokyo have only to shout "charcoal" or "potatoes" and hand over their Yen.

There is a constant stream of city dwellers and small-time black market buyers who know what they want but don't know where to go for it. The ticketsellers keep track of such things and sell passage to the right points.

At the moment "charcoal" means Chichibu, while "potatoes" will take the traveler either to Kumagaya or Ko-
