"I am not going to say anything until I see an attorney."

So the caravan of cars which took police and others to the section between Appalachia and Big Stone Gap on Casteel's promise to point out the grave where he told them he buried the girl after shooting her six years ago turned back for the night.

Casteel was brought to the Wise jail here to be held until he confers with Fred B. Greear, an attorney, and county authorities consider whether charges shall be placed against him.

He was booked on suspicion of murder and requested the attorney to represent him. Greear said later he would talk to Casteel in the morning about representation.
