

TO HAVE TO KEEP

CHAPTER SIXTEEN
Before she reached the apartment, Diane's anger had given way to a deep shame of herself. It was her own fault that the crowd did not take her and Bill's marriage seriously. She'd always spoken of it, when she was with them, in the lingo they used. A meaningless word for a deep, true meaning. A laugh—before they laughed at you!

With a suddenly sharpened comprehension she saw the things they did as meaningless. Anything, if it offered excitement and no matter that, when you got started in it, it proved as flat as a pricked toy balloon, for someone's thought immediately something else to do. A merry-go-round, that got you nowhere. And it was the only life she knew. Diane's anger had given way to a deep shame of herself. It was her own fault that the crowd did not take her and Bill's marriage seriously. She'd always spoken of it, when she was with them, in the lingo they used. A meaningless word for a deep, true meaning. A laugh—before they laughed at you!

"Paula? Going to be home? I'm coming over."
Paula opened the door to her father's in New York. I've let Edmonds and Mrs. Brill go for the day.
"Why didn't you go with Dad?"
"I'd had an aching tooth. I had it out the minute he went. I stood it 'til he got away. You know how he fusses over anything like that!"
Diane knew. She was relieved that her father was not here to see that something was wrong with her and fuss about that.
They went to Paula's room where Paula motioned Diane to a chaise longue heaped with satin pillows. "Make yourself comfortable, dear. I'll go on with my mending." She sat down in a straight chair by a low table on which was a worn wicker sewing basket.
Plain-faced, plainly dressed, with an undergarment of J. Emme's across her lap, she could well appear incongruous there amid the exquisite appointments of a room designed for Althea Mathewson, but to Diane, disaffected and wistful, she seemed to dominate everything about her by her very simplicity.
Paula never had assumed any authority over her or interfered by so much as a word in her father's indulgence of her which made for harmony in their relationship. But now, suddenly, Diane wished she had. That Paula had taught her something of her own hard-earned wisdom. She felt resentment rising toward her father. His pride in her never had been for her grades in school, for any development in her character; rather for the way she looked in a new dress, the way she drove her car, danced, swam. She remembered the triumph he had expressed when her picture appeared in a rotogravure page of a New York newspaper, the time she'd gone from school to a house-party on Long Island and had ridden with the others on a fox hunt. "That's showing them, girl!" "Showing what?" she thought, now bitterly.
And for herself, for Paula, he wanted nothing like that!
Before she could check it she was speaking her resentment. "Paula, why did you let Dad spoil me until I'm not good for anything?"
Though Paula was startled by the question and the vehemence with which Diane flung it out, she kept her eyes on her work. She had not missed an almost frightened tone in Diane's voice over the telephone. "Something's gone wrong," she had thought. But she'd let Diane tell it of her own

"THE BEST YEARS OF OUR LIVES"

IT WAS A HAPPY moment for Rev. Edwin F. Kever, aged, white-haired retired pastor of St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran church, when he received a cash token from the present pastor, Rev. Walter B. Freed, (left) at a Dad's and Son's banquet at the parish hall. Rev. Mr. Kever, veteran North Carolina cleric and a resident of Wilmington for the last 25 years, was honored last night. He will be 84 years old Sunday.

FIRST WAR DEAD ARRIVING TODAY

Remains Of PFC Hubert L. Horrell Of Castle Hayne Due At 1:00 P. M.

The remains of Pfc Hubert L. Horrell, Wilmington soldier, will arrive here today at 1 p. m. on an Atlantic Coast Line train, for the first burial ceremony of a Wilmington serviceman who was killed in the line of duty while serving overseas.

Meanwhile, coroner Gordon Doran said that the remains of seven additional Wilmington World War I veterans will arrive here in the near future for burial.

Horrell lived at Route 1, Castle Hayne prior to his entry into the armed forces. He met his death last year while at the wheel of an army truck in Japan, when the vehicle skidded off a cliff into the sea, according to Ray Galloway, executive director of the Wilmington American Legion post, which will furnish pallbearers for the burial ceremonies Monday.

Horrell's remains were shipped from San Francisco. He had served in the Pacific theatre of operations during combat, and before VJ day, Galloway said.

The dead soldier's parents requested the Legion not to hold a military funeral, but asked that a simple ceremony in the Atkinson, Pender county, cemetery be held. The funeral will begin at Wrightsboro.

Horrell is survived by his parents, four brothers, and one sister, Leila E. Horrell. The brothers are: John W. Horrell, LeRoy Horrell, Hurley Horrell, and Robert Horrell.

Funeral arrangements are in charge of Andrews Mortuary.

This day was provided for in a resolution to Congress, and was approved by this body on May 3, 1940. It reads, in part: "That the third Sunday in May each year be, and hereby is, set aside as Citizenship Day and that the President is hereby authorized and requested to issue annually a proclamation setting aside that day as a public occasion for the recognition of all who, by becoming of age or naturalization, have attained the status of citizenship, and the day shall be designated as 'I AM AN AMERICAN DAY.'"

"I'm From The South"....

"NORTH CAROLINA...that is!"

Why I've been a citizen of this state for almost fifty years and I think in terms of what I can do for South Eastern North Carolina and its citizens that I serve.

Yes, I'm from the South . . . but I'm also a friend of the North in that I'm always happy to be of service to the nation Especially when the so-called "Yankees" come South . . . North Carolina that is, and after seeing the wonderful life we enjoy, stay and become Southerners too!

South Eastern North Carolina is growing and getting better every year . . . that's why I'm proud to be able to help the expanding Southern industries, as well as continue to be the home-maker's cheapest and most dependable servant.
