Chique French Warbrides Meet For First Time At Wrightsville

Chique is the word, but as the Americans say "Chick" was the description applied to the two French warbrides, Mrs. E. G. Story and Mrs. R. W. Malone, now of Washington, D. C., as they chatted with much ado of hands last night at the Ocean Terrace hotel where they are spending several days with their American husbands.

Gorgeous Mrs. Malone, according to the reporter, and very intelligent Mrs. Story, met for the first time three days ago at the Ocean Terrace. Both, however, have four things in common—they are French warbrides, they have lived all their lives in France 15 miles apart, they both now live in Washington, D. C., and both have husbands attending Georgetown University.

Mrs. Malone, a former mannequin, "not model," is blond, has brown eyes and presents a willowy five feet, seven inch figure. Dressed in a newly imported Paris silk print creation, Mrs. Malone touched her dress lovingly last night as she said, "Eet eez a sint from Peree." With a French pardon me, she turned to Mrs. Story and spoke quickly in French. Interpreting, Mrs. Story said, "She says that she has forgotten to tell you the most important thing—she has a little son."
