Aggregation Fails To Draw Comment From Dramatist

AYOT ST. LAWRENCE, Her-fordshire, England, July 26-17-The curious who made a pilgrimage to the home of George Bernard Shaw today went away disappointed and muttering that maybe the seer is getting a bit too old to kick up his heels on - his birthday.

Clusters of the curious gathered about the old man's home hoping to wheddle him into some highjinks on his 91st birthday but Shaw kept out of their way and their sight.

Only a diminishing circle of the elect-old friends in creative arts, those who serve him in his home and a few children and old cronies among the villagers-contrived to glimpse more than Shaw's white beard as he poked his head out of the backyard workshop to gaze at the rolling hills or strolled in the

His best friends saw to it that outsiders didn't trespass too far. His nurse and housekeeper served a meal of vegetable and milk pudding. Anything resembling a birthday greeting was spiked witheringly.

Only occasionally were heard faint growls suggestive of the tantrums of previous birthdays which challenged the inquisitive with such outbursts as "do you think I am an ape that you come to for so many years-82 years after

"He's really been sweet-tempertry to make him out. We who if she hadn't died. know him best can vouch that he acteristic of old men."

With literary colleague S. Winsten. Shaw again discussed his views on man's potentialities for longer life, 200 to 300 years that

"He speaks about the years as a young man does," Winsten related, "and a listener might easily believe that Shaw is confident his future will run for 20 or 30 years. It must be his amazing intellectual vigor-and perhaps his careful, sensible way of living."
