Is better bridge played in the east or in the west? It is true that most of the Life Masters are in the east, but I think that this question will be decided within the next year or two by competition between the two sections. A large group of eastern players went out to California last year, and another delegation is planning to attend the tournament to be held November 5th to 9th, inclusive, at the Hotel Del Coronado, Coronado, Calif.

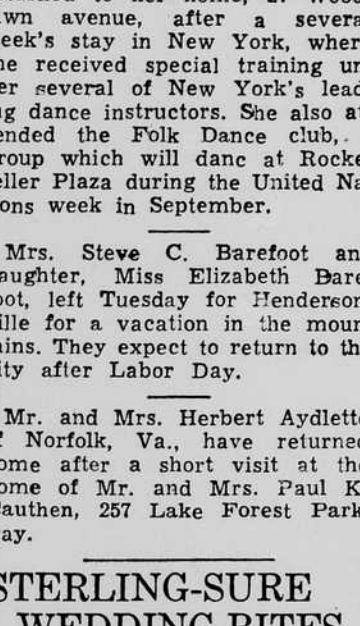

Today's hand came up at Coronado last year. The play is somewhat involved, and a good player might "blow" the hand. South wins the opening lead with the ace of clubs, takes three rounds of trumps, then takes the diamond finesse. East wins and shifts to a heart, and down goes declarer, losing two hearts, a diamond and a club.

The correct line of play is to win the first trick with the ace of clubs, take three rounds of trumps, winning the third round in the closed hand, then lead the five of clubs. The opening lead of the club king has marked West with the queen. West has to win this trick, and he shifts to a diamond. Declarer should go right up with dummy's ace, discard his seven of diamonds on the jack of clubs, then lead the queen of diamonds. If East does not cover, South discards a heart, because if West wins the diamond trick, there is no return he can make that will endanger the contract. If East covers the diamond, South trumps, and the jack and ten of diamonds provide discards for two of the hearts. Thus at most declarer loses two hearts and a club.

If lettruce is allowed to grow slowly in poor ground, it will be tough and unsatisfactory. One way to have quality lettruce is to make it grow rapidly, which means that it must have good, rich ground and plenty of room.

TODAY'S GARDEN-GRAPH

Cut and Come Again Lettuce

BY DEAN HALLIDAY
Distributed by Central Press Association

Many gardeners do not realize that leaf lettuce can be made practically everbearing by harvesting it with a pair of shears or a sharp knife instead of pulling it. Getting two crops from one plant doubles production in a small home garden.

Black-seeded Simpson is one of the most dependable and popular "loose-leaf" varieties. When its leaves are sheared, instead of being pulled, new leaves will develop for future salads.

Oak Leaf lettuce which is growing in popularity, also will produce two crops from one stalk, as illustrated in the accompanying Garden-Graph. After shearing of the top, as illustrated, a dressing of fertilizer will hasten the growth of the second crop.

Some gardeners never pull up or cut off the loose-leaved varieties of lettuce. Instead they pull off a few of the outside leaves of the plants. This allows the center leaves to continue growing for future use.

Lettruce frequently can be sown until almost the end of August with assurance of ample returns. When a cold frame or hotbed is at hand a few plants transplanted in October into such frames can be grown on through November and December with the protection of a glass covering.

To hasten the maturing of late planted lettruce apply a nitrogen fertilizer along the rows but also be sure to give the plants quantities of water.

If lettruce is allowed to grow slowly in poor ground, it will be tough and unsatisfactory. One way to have quality lettruce is to make it grow rapidly, which means that it must have good, rich ground and plenty of room.

Judges Find Salad Displays Equally Tasty And Colorful

one of the largest and loveliest of the salads. A fruit salad basically, Mrs. Hubbard used pears coated with cream cheese on which she placed half red grapes. Individual portions were centered with a large bunch of fresh red grapes.

Mrs. E. D. Williams also displayed a colorful fruit salad using green grapes surrounded by quarter grapefruits filled with red gelatin fruit salad. Each portion was placed in a fluffy cluster of lettuce.

Perhaps the most interesting exhibit was Mrs. Owen Barry Smith's rose and yellow cream cheese flowers, which were stuffed with chicken salad. Mrs. Smith uses an instrument which makes the cream cheese fall into petals forming the large flower.

Directors for the show, Miss Ruth Blackman, Mrs. Margaret Paulson, and Miss Shirley Newland, all expressed their satisfaction over the success of the show, the first to be held in North Carolina.

Salads were judged on appearance, food value, and taste.
