SIKES SUGGESTS

Do not particularly care for the Princess at this time. I will cite you a quote from one farmer. I met up with, deleting, naturally, that which might otherwise be censored on the Star-News copy desk.

"In this section," this farmer friend allowed, "we're getting ready to send 'em three or four hundred thousand pounds of tobacco."

I assume that my friend was talking about the Britishers when he said "em" and that he was talking also about the tobaccos that will be bought for British interests when the market opens here and which will be paid for through a complex arrangement with the Commodity Credit Corporation, one of Uncle Sam's moneybags.

I did not go further with the suggested project to purchase a wedding present for the Princess. But I did go diplomatically about to try to calm my friend.

I told him the British just didn't have the money to buy tobacco now, that they needed what dollars they could scrape together to buy meat and bread. I went into all the austerity under which the British are living and said we were just being nice to our Cousins across the sea by providing them with smokes. In the first place, I didn't want to start an argument over here in Duplin county that might have international complications and repercussions.

But my friend had other ideas. "I've been told," he said, "that Americans buy millions of dollars worth of Scotch whiskey from England every year. De we ask the British to lend us the money so we can buy this Scotch whiskey from them? I'll answer that: We do not!"

"But we do not need this Scotch whiskey just like the British leaders work out that the Britishers don't need our American tobacco.

British don't need our tobacco enough to pay for it out of their own pockets and we do not need the Scotch whiskey, how come we can't just swap the tobacco we grow that England wants for the Scotch whiskey that some of our people want? Seems to me that'd be fairer than us giving the English the money to pay for our tobacco and then us paying for the Scotch whiskey, too."
