ing the year at a net cost of $200,000, exclusive of specialist fees. The out-patient department reported 25,000 visits, and the diagnostic clinic had 30,000 patient visits. Eighty-two of the state's 100 counties were represented among the patients admitted in the past year.

The convention heard a student nurse, Miss Pauline Watts of Morganton, praise the work of the nurses school; a medical student, Clarence Clark of Knoxville, Tenn., tell of the medical school; a ministerial student, Everett Bernard of Tennessee, outline the work of the hospital's department of religion; and Dr. George T. Harrell, professor of internal medicine at Bowman Gray School of Medicine, outline the work of the school of medicine.

Dr. Harrell noted that two-thirds of the medical students are from North Carolina.

Personal Service He said that the medical school has "tried to make our service more personal than at other institutions."

"We will not compromise with quality," he said.

Research at Bowman Gray has gained national recognition, and a number of grants for research has been obtained.

Dr. Harrell said that the Harvard Medical School, "which I consider the best in the United States", has recommended that its students do graduate work at Bowman Gray as they consider it as one of the 10 best medical schools in the nation. The convention adopted the general board's report, which among other things called for: An overall goal of $2,500,000 for the year 1950 for Baptist work, $1,000,000 going to the Southern Baptist convention.

An allocation of $7,500 for the use of the Allied Church League plus a request that every pastor in the state give his people a message on temperance. Establishment of an assembly grounds, on a leased site near Fort Fisher about the first of June 1948.

And, continuation of the Assembly begun last year at Fruitland.

Rural Church Work The convention also approved setting up by the general board in cooperation with Wake Forest College a department of rural church work at the college. This will begin July 1, 1948, with an appropriation of $3,000 annually from the general board and a like amount each year from the school.

Resolutions authorizing the purchase of the Baptist Book Store in Charlotte for $95,000 and the Student Center at Chapel Hill for an estimated $35,000 were passed on their second readings.

A seven-man committee was named to secure the Student Center property, with Grover H. Jones of High Point as chairman.

The convention passed a motion, introduced by T. L. Gardner of Reidsville that "in the name of the convention, the general secretary shall write the North Carolina Senators and Representatives urging them to vote for passage of the bill prohibiting the advertising of alcohol beverages."

Just before the final sermon, Dr. C. C. Warren of Charlotte, retiring president, turned the gavel over to Rev. John W. Suttle of Shelby, the newly-elected president, who told the convention he had missed only three state conventions in the past 60 years.

and Harbors board meeting early in January of 1948.

The recommendation, which was granted in Atlanta some time ago, had been held up for a re-estimation of costs, it was explained. Engineers, who favor the project, have stated that a benefit ratio of 1.23 per cent for the funds spent will be realized from an expected increase in Wilmington port traffic.

Following approval by the Rivers and Harbors board, the project would have to be approved by the Bureau of the Budget, the secretary of the army, chief of engineers and Congress. Engineers were said to be seeking the remainder of funds necessary to complete deepening of the channel to 32 feet, already under way, during the current fiscal year.

had disposed of several thousand aircraft shares by 1942.

2. Carmine S. Bellino, a committee investigator, then testified that 2,700 aircraft shares, valued at $35,074.50 were listed on the same date as held by Meyers in an account with the firm of Greene and Brock, Dayton, Ohio.

3. The committee produced evidence that the Air Forces received in 1945, but never investigated, an anonymous letter charging that Meyers reaped "immense profits" from purchasing stock in companies he knew would get Air Force contracts.

These developments followed a disclosure that the Air Corps had launched an investigation January 7, 1943, on its own to "squell" rumors that high ranking officers were holding large blocks of stocks in aviation companies with which they dealt.

Col. William O. Nuckolls, Air Force public relations officer, revealed that a "secret" memorandum had been sent to 10 Air Force procurement officers asking them to list any such securities. The information was sought by then Maj. Gen. George E. Stratemeyer, Air Force chief of Staff, and the officers were told the data would be kept confidential.

Meyers was among those receiving the query.

ed to an "across the board" increase.

The commission received from City Manager H. A. Yancey of Charlotte a telegram which pointed out that the increase asked for Charlotte is greater than for "similar service in smaller communities." Commission Chairman Stanley Winborne said the commission probably would permit Charlotte city officials to file a brief outlining their contentions.

Spokesmen for the telephone company told the commission that the increase, which would cost the customers about $680,000 in revenue after taxes, was justified because of higher operating costs.

R. R. Stubbs, of Atlanta, an assistant vice president for Southern Bell, told the commission that wage increases granted last May would cost the company $549,000 a year, and that costs of materials and equipment have increased sharply in the year since Southern Bell was granted an increase on its business phone rates and on its long distance tolls.

Objections Weighed

Ben S. Gilmer of Atlanta told the commission that the objections filed by the Greensboro officials had been "considered very carefully" and that he did not consider that the higher percentage increase for four-party and two-party customers as inequitable.

He pointed out that with an increase of only 25 cents per month for four-party customers at Greensboro, Winston-Salem and Raleigh, one-party customers would have to be increased 90 cents per month in order to obtain the same amount of revenue.

Rev. Robert Strange, D. D., also served St. James from 1887 to 1900. During his time many physical improvements were made in the church property and great spiritual progress was noted in the congregation.

The Rev. William H. Milton, D. D., rector from 1909 to 1936 was one of the original members of the National Council of the Episcopal church, and the first head of its Field department. Under him St. James parish assumed a position of national prominence and leadership in the church. It became known as a great missionary parish, was one of the first to demonstrate the value of the Every Member Canvass, and organized one of the first Parish councils, which were to become regular features of Episcopal church organization.

ment by Senator Taft (R-Ohio), in which the Senator, a candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination, said there was a suggestion of American imperialism about some aspects of European aid recommended by Secretary of State Marshall.

Mr. Truman said a cartoon in today's Washington Evening Star was a good reply and an appropriate comment. The cartoon, by Jim Berryman, showed Taft fondling twin dummies labeled "Too Little" and "Too Late." Senator Vandenberg (R-Mich), chairman of the Senate foreign Relations committee was pictured as saying to Taft: "Lining up your opposition to the Marshall plan, Bob?"

willingness to become a candidate under these conditions in answering the request of the executive committee of the State Republican Committee and others.

"If a person in my position, being willing to have an active campaign waged on his behalf by the California delegation, can be termed an active candidate, then I am an active candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination," he said at a press conference.

"If the matter is considered in the light of my willingness to wage an active personal campaign for the nomination, then I can not be considered a candidate."

most. Move into the area you select. Then expose yourself to contacts.

"And there's a good chance you'll get your man," he added. "But don't forget that there are still 2,000,000 more eligible women than men in the country, so the hard part will be in keeping him."

To do this the psychologist laid down some cardinal principles to be followed when first choosing your mate.

First, pick someone who is temperamentally suited to you, who will be a counterpart to your own personality. If you are a hen-pecking female find a man who doesn't want to wear one of the family pants. If you are the timid type, get yourself a dominating partner.

Be sure your one-and-only comes from a cultural background similar to yours, and is accustomed to about the same standard of living. Your education should be similar and so should your habits.

Never marry on short acquaintance. Never marry a man who comes from an unhappy home; he'll end up making you that way. And if you are both drinkers, atheists, and don't want children you'll probably be contributing to the increasing divorce rate.

Never for a minute think that marriage is a 50-50 proposition. Because it's still a man's world. "Marriage means more to a woman than it does to man, so she just has to contribute more than 50 per cent to it if she wants it a success," Bender continued.

He pointed out that some of the things considered marital problems today are really not. For instance, it does not matter whether your man is 15 years your junior or senior, if you are temperamentally compatible, he said. And if you are tolerant and of different religions your marriage has as good a chance as if you were both of the same church.

The cheery psychologist pointed out that you can even be happy if all else fails and you end up a spinster. "An unmarried woman who gets to know herself and can sublimate her love through socially accepted channels, can be as happy as the gal with a guy," he said.

Testimony at the coroner's inquest showed that Brooks, then chief of police, was walking across the street when Hinson cut loose with a 12 gauge shotgun, the charge striking the chief in the thigh.
