What Alcohol Does To Body

By WILLIAM A. O'BRIEN, MD

Alcoholics become ill from ex. cessive indulgence, or through failure to eat while drinking The chief chronic complications from alcohol affect the brain spinal cord and liver.

Action of alcohol upon the body can be likened to an ether anesthetic. Although alcohol y sometimes considered to be stimulant, its chief effect is to depress the nervous system. The first result is a feeling of ex. hilaration, which follows release of restraints. The face become flushed, pulse is full and bound. ing and the victim breather deeply.

Speech becomes loud and in. coherent. Foul language is used and stories are told which, un der ordinary conditions, would be repressed. All effects are heightened by the companion. ship of other persons who are experiencing the same reactions.

In acute intoxication, there is loss of nervous and muscular control. Reaction time is slowed down and accidents occur from inattention and poor judgment Any drinker may get into trouble in this phase, if he at. tempts to drive a car or walk n traffic.

An attack of delirium tremens can easily develop in a chronic alcoholic. As a result of great restlessness and depression, he is unable to sleep and consumes more alcohol. After a few days the alcoholic sees and hear things which are not real. Immediate medical and hospital care is necessary, if a fatal termination is to be avoided.

In spite of beliefs to the contrary, the stomach of the chronic alcoholic is seldom atfected. Illustrations often depict the lining of the alcoholic's stomach as bright red and covered with sores, but this is rarely, if ever, seen. The appetite may be lost, but the stomach it. self shows very little out of the ordinary when examined with a special instrument.

Cirrhosis or hardening of the liver develops in chronic alcoholics and moderate and heavy drinkers. If an animal is denied food and given alcohol at the same time, cirrhosis of the liver holics who do not eat while drinking are more apt to develop this condition.

Excessive indulgence in alcohol shortens the life expectance but statistics show that the outlook for social drinkers and teetotalers is essentially the same, her basic problems in health and welfare, but to force upon that country a compulsory system of socialized medicine."

This charge, coming on the heels of evidence to the effect that certain appointive government officials of some importance have been using public funds to promote socialized medicine, is an extremely serious one. Socialization of medicine-or any profession or industry—is in direct opposition to American principles and traditions. All the available evidence including findings of national public opinion polls, leads to the belief that the great majority of our citizens are opposed to it. Yet, if Mr. Harness and others in a position to know are correct, an American official mission will attempt to force it in one form or another on Japan. Is it not possible for our government to lend its aid to promote public health practices without seeking to socialize medicine?

Up To The Common Man

While there is little probability that Congress, at least during the present extraordinary session, will implement with legislation President Truman's proposal for price controls, there is no reason to doubt that Congress will closely watch price trends and unless there is some evidence that they will rapidly be downward-bound approve measures for forcing them to lower levels.

To this extent we may believe the President's message is destined to have a definite effect upon prices even though there is no vidence of immediate and desired results. The republican leadership in both oranches of Congress is divided on controls. Senator Taft, for example, declares attention will be given only the less controversial" proposals in Mr. Truman's program. That is to say, the joint Economic Committee of the same despotic authority but they had which Mr. Taft is chairman will devote its to go in for subterfuge and terror, not that time to these matters. But this does not necessarily mean that all republican members in either branch will be bound by Mr. Taft's decision, or even that the gentleman from Ohio will not change his mind before the special session closes or merges with the regular session scheduled to start in January. He has been known to do this in the

The point that deserves emphasis is that because pressure from back home is growing, the members in both branches are more aware of current inflationary tendencies and the encouragement of these tendencies is given by the ascending price spiral than they have appeared to be in the past, are more liable to take the reins out of the hands of Senator Taft and his particular group on Capitol Hill if there is no indication that business in general and labor in particular have no intention of remedying the nation's economic illness without specific legislation. Inflation is no more welcome to republigrievously and independently of party afgrievously and independently of party af-filiation. And in the last analysis it is this common man who rules Congress whenever, of L., that the law meant slavery.

As Pegler Sees It

By WESTBROOK PEGLER

NEW YORK — If the working-people, the wage-earners, of the United States, have suffered any loss through the adoption of the Taft-Hartley law, the blame must lie with the great, greedy bosses of the union movement. They had the power to reform the unions, to stop the persecution of indivi-duals, and the harassment of communities by unnecessary and oppressive strikes. They could have abated the robbery of millions of workers through assessments for causes in which they had no interest, for expensive insurance and for undisguised rackets. But, throughout the Rooseveit administration, they refused to drop their selfish politics and answered every criticism and warn-ing with the monotonous cry of "laborbaiter.

Actually, the only important baiters of labor during those years were not the Na-tional Association of Manufacturers nor any of the journalists or candidates, but some of the presidents and vice-presidents of unions, Jimmy Petrillo by now has convinced him-self that he actually does serve his "boys" but, a few years ago, he openly smirked about his holy mission and the enormous proportion of Saturday night saxophonists in his American Federation of Musicians. The union did nothing for them. It merely preyed upon them, compelling these clerks, students and carpenters, men of a hundred occupations, to buy membership under him and pay their dues and fines and submit to his tyrannical discipline so that they might earn a few extra dollars on weekends

Jimmy's powers are really terrible. Other Jimmy's powers are really terrible. Other union bosses have the same powers, but Jimmy's are written out for him in an article of his constitution which permits him to rule absolutely by whim, subject to no challenge or appeal. The cruel gangsters of the Hodcarriers' and the Operating Engineers' unions and some of the machine polithis emparrassed those who ruled by these methods.

Jimmy's was the only union whose founding fathers had had the gall to spell out the proposition that unionism was a totalitarian racket and it was significant that his most alarming excesses began after he hired Joseph Padway as his general counsel. 1 paid my respects to this parasite on the body of American labor when he died a few weeks ago but I have always been willing to add that the most arrogant of the dictatorial profiteers in American unionism was also the cleverest shyster in union law. Padway was not necessarily a fine lawyer, although he did have his points. He handled a class of clients who always had a great ad-vantage under law and could pay off judgments, if they lost, by the painless process of levying assessments on the faceless peo-ple who carried the cards and did the work. This gave Padway an advantage over law-yers for the other side. I say it was significant that Jimmy really started to go to town only after he hired Padway, because Padway was the legal adviser of the entire American Federation of Labor. His ruthless thinking directed the great A. F. of L. in many of its policies throughout this time cans than democrats. For my part, I am not so sure at bottom that man is, as he says, the king of nature; he is far more its devastating tyrant. I believe he has many learn from animal societies, older than his own and of infinite variety. -Romain Rolland.

Pomp And Circumstance

Princess Elizabeth, heir apparent to the crown og Great Britian, vesterday became the bride of Lieut. Philip Mountbatten and the shriveling Empire was agog over the nuptials. In London flags were fluttering on all buildings, scaffolding had been raised for stands along the way between Buckingham Palace and Westminster Abbey, where the ceremony took place, and barricades created to hold the populace and visitors back. Nothing else that could happen, less than outbreak of a war, could hold equal interest with this marriage in London or, for that matter, in the tight little isles.

Though the event was to be largely a family affair, just about all the royalty left in the world was in the Abbey when the Archbishops of Canterbury and York performed the rites. King Michael of Romania, King Haakon of Norway, King Frederik and Queen Ingrid of Denmark, Queen Frederika of Greece, Princess Juliana and Prince Bernhard of Holland, Prince Charles - regent of Belgium - King Peter and former Queen Alexandra of Yugoslavia, Prince John and Princess Elizabeth of Luxembourg, Princess Eugenie of Greece and Don Juan of Spain, were listed among favored guests in the pageantry. Among the missing were the exiled King Leopold of Belgium and King Paul of Greece, who is recovering at home from typhoid fever. Also the Duke and Duchess of Windsor were absent.

In addition, among the guests were the foreign diplomatic corps and the members of parliament, the Cabinet and other dignitaries. Nothing like it has happened since Queen Victoria wed Prince Albert, who gave his name to a coat which enjoyed distinction throughout the world for many years.

Considering Britain's economic situation and political unrest, coupled with world turmoil, the fact that the nation can proceed with the customary pomp and circumstance accompanying a royal wedding are weary of socialism and regimentation, can well be accepted as evidence that there will always be an England, as the war song enterprise, whatever its faults, is the only declared.

Misguiding Japan

A short time ago, a number of governmental bureaus combined to send a special health mission to Tokyo to assist in the formulation of a new national health program for Japan. According to Representative Forest A. Harness of Indiana, who is chairman of the sub-committee investigating publicity and propaganda in the executive agencies, "All members of this mission are well known in the United States for their persistent agitation for a nationalized system of socialized medicine to be acheived through a program of complusory health insurance." Mr. Harless said further that "the real purpose of the hission is not to assist Japan in working out | Corp.

fluence to force Congress to do something for him.

It is he who will make the final decision on inflation. Very definitely he wants it brought to an end. One commentator puts the matter well when he writes: "Congress cannot casually turn aside the President's recommendations and at the same time calmly watch prices continue to rise during the next few months."

Britain's Object Lesson

The Briitish municipal elections, in which the Conservative party made startling gains and the Labor party suffered equally startling losses, may indicate a sharp change in the attitude of the rank and file of English people toward the principles of socialism. The Labor government cannot blame this reverse on the austerity program-Mr. Churchill and the other opposition leaders have said time and time again that austerity is necessary to the economic salvation of Britain, and so it has not been a major political issue. It is much more likely to suppose that legions of British voters have come to the conclusion that socialism has failed to live up to the claims made for it, that socialism is sapping the resources and energies of the nation at an alarming rate and that, under a government which puts the attainment of a complete socialist state before any other consideration, the sacrifices of austerity citizens without a strike vote. are in vain.

If that is becoming the British point of view, it is built solidly upon logic. Britain has socialized her vital coal industry-and production is much less than under private ownership, and there has been no noticeable change in worker dissension. She has socialized the Bank of England and other instruments of domestic and international finance -and her economic position worsens daily. She is threatening to socialize electric power and other basic enterprises—and this has caused widespread fear and uncertainty which have contributed to her economic doldrums. The Labor government has created an enormous, self-seeking bureaucracy which has strangled English enterprise in it has been guilty of monumental failure in men for daring to fight back. the administration of British affairs at home and abroad. If, as the municipal elections indicate, a substantial proportion of the British people it is an object lesson for this country. Free system yet devised which permits maximum economic development of a nation and still assures the liberties of the people. That is one fact we must never forget.

The nation simply will no longer stand for the continued concentration of financial control in a few hands and in one place. -Cyrus Eaton, Cleveland industrialist.

prison at last, were strong men in unionism. The criticism of these bosses is that they either misused their strength, meaning their force of character as well as their following in goons, to oppress the real workers of the United States, or failed to use it in the interests of reform. Green could have been a great American by now, or Murray, or any of the others, who had been wise and honest enough to say, five or six years ago, "the union movement must make peace with the people and the law of the United States and serve the community in which it lives."

But they missed their opportunity and now the whole lot of them are reduced to howling to the rank and file worker that he is a slave in chains and bleeding from the blows of the knout. But the worker looks at his wrists and sees no bands and he takes inventory and finds no wounds.

On the contrary, he is beginning to realize that he can now appeal to the government to protect him from his union .This is a new freedom that already has stirred in many men of the teamsters' union a spirit of revolution against Dan Tobin, president for more than 30 years, a longer reign than most kings have enjoyed. It is dawning on the rank and file that they have rights under unionism which they never even dreamed of in the days of Franklin D. Roosevelt under the Wagner Act, unmitigated. The majority of the union members are of such an age that they began working under Roosevelt and never knew any other condition than the denial of fair trials under law, the large arbitrary fines and assessments, the whistle in the mouth of some criminal rac-tex., population 500, is said to money and a lot of wheat, it is impact of this overturn on the too early to say that the third keteer, calling out a thousand American

The majority of the union workers of tolay never realized that they actually had rights. But they believed, because they had been raised that way, that unions were a private government unto themselves with no responsibility to the nation or the various states.
