ABBE'S NEW 1947 INSPIRATIONAL READINGS ARE READY

P.C. — I stayed overseas 2 years. I came home on a furlough and I had my wife to go to my mother in the east and bring her out here. I am out of service now. Since returning I have found out that my wife did everything she could to make mother happy while I was away. For some reason we aren't a bit happy now. My wife and mother fuss all the time. If I do something for my wife, mother punishes me. If I do anything for mother, my wife punishes me. I am so upset I don't know what to do. We all three have to live in the same room as it is impossible to find a large place to stay out here. I love both of them very much. Tell me what to do.

Ans. The mystery is that you have been able to live together this long, three in a room, without a battle royal. It is absurd to try to combine such an arrangement. There is mutual love and respect between your wife and mother but the tension of jam-packing your living in one small room is too nerve-wrecking for all concerned. Help your mother to find a nice room to herself, for she is not totally dependent upon you. Once she is on her own again, relations between the three of you will be restored to normal.

M.H. — There is a young man coming to see my daughter who seems very nice and has asked her to marry. She says she loves him and he apparently loves her. My girl is a nice girl, a high school graduate and is smart as can be. I don't want her to make a mistake. I don't know very much about the fellow. I do know he takes care of his mother, sister, and brother and he treats us well. Should I consent for her to marry him?

Ans. Encourage them to wait a couple of more months until they had the opportunity to know each other better. Your daughter is very likable and is quite young to be getting married. Be understanding with these young people and try to show them that you want them to

J.E. — I have been married nine years and we have four children. My husband doesn't want to give me anything but what we have to have and when I ask him for something, he says he hasn't got it. I am planning on leaving him and going out for myself. Tell me what to do right away.

Ans. Looking after four kids is a full size job, my good woman. Men may easily find yourself in one circumstance if you try to thinking about him. Should continue my friendship with him? Is there any future in this? I have never been in love before.

Ans. Nor are you in love now. You are letting your imagination run wild. Call a halt to this affair now before you get in trouble. The man in the case doesn't love you and he is making an effort to encourage your attention. You can easily ruin your reputation on the campus if you continue carrying the torch for this married man. Try exercising your charms and feminine wiles on the single boys, if you hope to win a husband.
