FEPC Bill Introduced In Pennsylvania Legislature

HARRISBURG, Pa. (NNPA) — Senator John M. Walker, Republican of Allegheny County, last Wednesday introduced in the Pennsylvania Legislature a bill to create a fair employment practice commission to prevent race or religious discrimination in employment thru "conference, conciliation and education."

Under the terms of the bill, employers would be prohibited from refusing to hire or from firing anyone because of race, color, creed, national origin or ancestry. Domestic workers would be excluded from the provisions of the measure. An appropriation of $200,000 is requested for salaries and expenses of the proposed commission.

Labor unions also would be denied the right to deny full membership to any person on account of race, color, creed, national origin or ancestry.

The commission would be authorized to hold hearings on complaints of discrimination and render decision, but its chief aim would be to foster community efforts, goodwill, cooperation, conciliation and education to end discriminatory employment practices.

Violators of the law would be subject to a fine of from $25 to $250 for first and second offenses and of $500 or imprisonment of one year, or both, for third and subsequent violations.

MEXICANS FARM ON COOPERATIVE BASIS

Among the farmers of the Gold Coast, British West Africa, cooperative societies and groups of them, called unions, have developed greatly during the last few years. Farmer-members of the unions, now numbering nine, produce timber, cocoa, bananas, kola nuts, coffee, and other food crops. The largest union is in Kumasi with a membership of over 2,000 farmers and 42 affiliated societies. Each farmer-member shares the benefits and duties of his society, and is responsible individually for the quality of his crop and their speedy delivery for marketing. He attends monthly meetings and helps solve the society's problems, and has vote in the election of a managing committee, to handle the financial and business side of his society. He also elects members to attend general meetings of the union and make decisions on his behalf.

The government of the British colony has a cooperative staff, but its duties are advisory. The African farmer himself runs his farm, his society and his union. The Kumasi Cooperative union owns a modern building and store and serves as a centre to which the societies send their cocoa beans for weighing, checking, grading, and packing for export. At the end of last year it had handled 6,419 tons of cocoa, its farmers had subscribed $91,644 in share capital and its reserve funds totalled $20,572. It also acts as a branch of the Gold Coast Cooperative bank, loaning last year $18,724 to its farmers on short-term credit.
