Chaplain Preaches Own Funeral By Recording

Chicago (ANP) — Members of Berean Baptist church here Saturday heard the voice of their deceased pastor deliver his own eulogy during his own funeral services. The Rev. William S. Braddan, pastor of the church for 43 years, died at his home last Wednesday after a long illness, but recorded his own funeral eulogy in 1945 when he celebrated the 43rd anniversary as Berean's pastor. Since that time, Rep. Braddan has been forced into virtual retirement because of ill health.

The 75-year-old prelate, born in a U. S. army camp at Ft. McCavitt, Tex., followed the army life of his father, who enlisted in the Union army in 1864 and fought throughout the Civil war, then served as bandmaster in the old 24th Infantry until 1874. Rev. Braddan spent his boyhood in army camps in the southwest where Negro troops were stationed during the Indian wars and served in the 10th Cavalry from 1888 until 1891. Educated in Colorado. He was educated in the ministry at Cutler academy in Colorado Springs, Co., and at Newton Institute, Cambridge, Mass. Before accepting the pastorate of Berean Baptist church here in 1901, he pastored churches in Ann Arbor, Mich., Minneapolis and Detroit.

Rev. Braddan joined the old E. phth regiment in 1902 as a private and rose to be commissioned captain and chaplain in 1912. He served with the regiment through the Mexican campaign in 1916, and in France during World War I. He was retired with the rank of colonel in 1935. He is survived by five daughters, one son and two grandchildren.

Background music for his funeral recording was furnished by the celebrated Berean choir, singing "Till We Meet Again."

Early Negro Newspapers Are Being Microfilmed

Atlanta (ANP) — Journalism Quarterly, published at Emory university here, carried an article in its current issue, written by Armistead Scott Pride, director of the Lincoln University School of Journalism, Jefferson City, Mo., in which Pride describes the project he has been working on during the past year, the microfilming of early Negro newspapers. Pride writes that his first task was that of determining the extent of microfilming which had already been done. He learned that a few of the early newspapers had already been microfilmed. These included Freedom's Journal (New York, 1827-1829); The Weekly Advocate and its successor, the Colored American (New York, 1837-1842); The North Star and its successor, Frederick Douglass' Paper (1847-1860 Rochester, N. Y.); New National Era (Washington, D. C., 1870-1875), and the Petersburg, Va., Lance (1882-1894).

Setting out to discover where the papers might be found, Pride sent a questionnaire to more than 200 libraries and historical societies, searched for titles and listings among community, state and national newspaper histories and bibliographies. He visited most of the communities in which Negro newspapers have been published. Complete or partial files for most of the well-known Negro newspaper, of the past century will be in the microfilming to the extent of some 140,000 pages, the investigator stated.

The microfilming was done under the auspices of the Committee in Negro studies of the American Council of Learned Societies. Among the members of this committee are Sterling Brown of Howard university, Lawrence D. Reddick, New York Public Library; Lorenzo D. Turner, Roosevelt college, Chicago, but formerly of Fisk; and Donald Young of the Social Science Research Council. The grant making it possible was made by the General Education board of New York City during the regime of the late Jackson Davis, then president.
