teen to eleven years of age were busy grading, tying and stacking the tobacco leaves. The work moved along as deftly and as skillfully as on a factory assembly line.

For a few minutes I thought that the two youngest sons, Council, 9, and Norvell, 6, were getting away with playing while everyone else worked.

When as the pile of leaves on the long work table dwindled, the 2 youngsters went down into the sledge and picked up more leaves which they stacked on the table.

Despite the fact that we were talking to Mrs. Scott and her daughters the entire time, there was no cessation or slowing down of the work.

After a short while Mr. Scott came in from the field. "You folks certainly do keep busy," I said.

"Well, Mr. Scott replied, "We want to get all of this tobacco in before time for the children to go back to school."

Earlier Mr. Scott had said that once the loading and curing of the tobacco had been started, it was necessary to keep at it until the job was finished.

When Mrs. Scott was asked how she found time to keep house during tobacco season, she said, "I don't. We just camp while we are getting the tobacco in."

however gave the impression of anything but camping. Floors were swept and clean. Beds were neatly made and there were no dishes in the sink as so often the case of many city homes in the middle of the day when all the members of the family are at work.

The white frame bungalow on the home was immaculate and freshly painted and in good repair as were the rest of the farm buildings. The livestock which included four mules, six cows, and 27 hogs were sleek, fat, and gave every appearance of being well cared for.

Approximately 200 chickens and a large table garden made it very unlikely that the Scott family would be bothered about the high cost of food for some time to come.

"You certainly do have plenty," we remarked. "With ten to feed and eight to send to school, you certainly need it," Mr. Scott answered. He's right.

further outbreaks are, also as a means of weakening the prejudices shown by both police and civilians. In letters to the lord mayor and city aldermen of Liverpool, Makenen complained of police brutality and the large numbers of European policemen still posted in the African district and also of the fact that no investigation has been made.

Africans have lived in Liverpool for over a century. Today, 8,000 live there. Of the adults, 30 percent are seafarers; 10 percent employed ashore, and 60 percent usually unemployed because of racial discrimination. These 60 percent must be supported by the public assistance.

Most of these people came here during the war between 1939 and 1945 to help in the British war effort. They have continuously been victims of racial prejudice because of their color.

and of finding employment for them should they become handicapped. This is not a one week responsibility, he emphasized, but a 52-week-a-year job.

Three Negroes were among the 200 leaders of industry, farm, women's veterans', religious, educational, professional, medical, civic and fraternal organizations who attended this committee meeting.

The Negro organizations represented were the Associated Negro Press by Mrs. Alice A. Dunnigan; the NAACP by Clarence Mitchell and Howard University by James M. Nabrit.

Both President Truman and Secretary of State Marshall pledged their cooperation in assisting this committee in its effort to rehabilitate the physically handicapped.

Secretary of Labor Tobin expressed his interest in the work of this committee and pledged his support in taking up where his predecessor, the late Secretary Schweiker, left off in supporting the work of his committee.

Michael J. Shortley pointed out that 220,000 disabled men and women have been placed in jobs in the past two years by the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation plans. Three out of four of those rehabilitated were jobless when the service first started, he said.

Edward L. Keenan told that the United States Employment service has done toward finding employment for these people and Charles E. Dillon outlined the program put in action by the Veterans Administration.

The meeting was under the sponsorship of its chairman, Adm. Ross T. McIntire.

in North Africa, Liberia would have been one of the centers of conflict and supply.

The United States has done little for Liberia, however. Liberia had no share in ERP funds. A harbor has been built there with lend lease funds, every penny of which Liberia must pay back. In case of war Liberia must automatically turn her harbor and airfield over to U. S. control.

The U. S. has a health mission and economic mission in Liberia, both of which have done good work but now when most needed due to the slash of funds by congress these two ventures are threatened. Dr. Tobias urged that Liberia be given the same sort of treatment which the United States is giving to European and South American nations.

By William Henry Huff for ANP "I've paid the debt I owed society, I've washed my garments clean; I count it not as impropriety To say that it was mean Of me to ever get entangled With low and common trash, No matter what the prize it dangled, Or gold that it could flash, Or you may bet I've paid my debt."
