Ford "Idea Man" May Collect $1,500.00 For Plant Suggestion

BY ISAAC JONES
DETROIT (AP) — Ideas for improving working conditions at the River Rouge plant of the Ford Motor company have proved very profitable for auto worker Elmer Davis, 47. For his latest suggestion, Davis will soon receive a sum which may be as high as $1,500. — Davis attributes his success as an idea man to two things — careful observation of things around him, and prescribing good remedies for improvements.

A utility sand temper in the production foundry building, Davis has worked for the firm 23 years. He has been married to his wife, Mrs. Jackie Davis, for 10 years. They have no children.

His first profit from his idea earned him $72 or $24 a day, the sum saved by his company on a three day operation. His suggestion improved the sand control belt.

His advice saved an operation on the belt by sending directly to the mixing crew all waste sand rather than a roundabout method previously used.

His next idea called for small crates from his department to the floor below to convey waste sand and metal so that it would not create a working hazard to the plant.

Under the old system waste sand and metals had to be swept up periodically or else endanger the workers' safety. Often small pieces of metal pierced the men's shoes.

With Davis' idea in action the man's accident total went down.

For this idea Davis received $400.00. The money saved by the firm during 60 days of operation under the new program.

His latest creation is a sand-closing invention. This system has operated perfectly for three months now, and he is awaiting a possible bonus of $1,500. Before Davis, the machine usually closed twice a day, delaying 32 men 15 to 20 minutes each time.

Since he started working for Ford, Davis has attended Ford's trade school and studied electricity, refrigeration and engineering. He is interested in small machines and has many books on this topic at his home library.

His suggestions to those who would like to earn money with their suggestions for plant improvement is, "Observe the sore spots and prescribe a remedy for their cure."

WOMEN CRITICIZE JIMCROW AT LETTER CARRIER'S MEETING

BY RAMONA LOWE
MIAMI (AP) — Women attending the National Ladies Auxiliary of Letter carriers were critical of the separate accommodations provided for the women delegates. "They were separate," said one, "and not equal."

Although no differences were practiced in their meetings at the Columbus hotel, one group was embarrassed when during registration at the McAllister they were informed unnecessarily by the management that they could not stay there.

Mrs. C. L. Banks of Jacksonville, grand old lady of the convention, who has been to every since since the organization's inception, pointed out that this was the first time they had met in the south. "The first convention I went to," she said, "was in Providence, R. I. There we were all together in everything we did and everybody had a good time. In Minneapolis in '29 it was the same way. When the whites were entertaining we were there and we were entertained too. We got the same treatment they got. There was no difference. Here they're in one place and we're in another."

"One year we went to Oakland, Cal. We had a special train from Chicago and we went up to Vancouver and traveled from there part way by boat. We stopped at the large cities and everywhere had something for the carriers. We got off one Sunday morning and went to a little white church and when we got back, there were cantaloupes in all of our places."

"In San Francisco they entertained us and there was no difference made because of color. We were taken to Golden Gate and to Chinatown."

"At Los Angeles the city commission had arranged a sight seeing tour for us and we went out to Catalina Island. We saw all these places the year the convention was in Oakland."

"Then one year we went to Cleveland and another year to Milwaukee and another year to Denver. There we had barbecued buffalo. Everywhere we always had all you wanted to eat. And where white people were waiting tables they waited on us too."

Chicken and Cranberry Wed At Festival

SOUTH CARVER, MASS. — At a novel Cranberry Festival in advance of National Cranberry Week, the little white hen and the little red cranberry were united in marriage, and vowed henceforth to appear together on dinner tables from coast to coast. At the ceremony, Elizabeth Torrey of Hanson, Mass., dressed in a fluffy white feathered costume, became the bride of an animated can of cranberry sauce. John Charles, Boston Attorney for the National Cranberry Association, performed the ceremony. The Cranberry Festival, coming at the peak of the harvest season, celebrated the harvesting of the third largest cranberry crop on record from the ocean sprayed bogs of Cape Cod, New Jersey, Wisconsin, Washington and Oregon.
