without school to still a day for while teacher hospitals.

Charlotte and Gaston Memorial of Gastonia in North Carolina, ranked high in construction improvements.

The Duke Endowment contributed nearly $600,000 to hospitals of both states, but did not reveal how these funds were distributed among the various institutions.

To the two states' 40 orphan institutions, including four Negro, the Duke Endowment gave $146,000.

The four Negro homes operated on a much skimpier budget than whites. Their yearly per capita cost was $463 compared to from $374 for white children.

Among the fund's contributions were $4,867 to the colored orphanage of North Carolina in Oxford and $1,940 to the Jenkins orphanage in Navy Yard, S. C.

Since the Duke Endowment began in 1924, Johnson C. Smith University has received $1,192,546 from the fund in allocations and distributions.

predicted that at some time in the future "on this spot made holy by the late Dr. Shepard the children of all people shall come to be educated, and this campus shall be filled with a conviction about the meaning of life that will conquer the world.

"And when it happens," he continued, "not only the Negro will be free, but the South will be free indeed because it believes in the higher capacity of human nature as such."

E. N. Duke Auditorium was the scene of the special services which began at 10:30 a.m. and featured special music by the college choir in addition to a tribute to the memory of North Carolina College's first president and founder by Capus Waynick, chairman of the institution's board of trustees.

Dr. Johnson who has been visiting the NCC campus for more than 15 years, urged his listeners to follow Dr. Shepard's example in dealing honestly with his fellowmen without utterly compromising.

"The young people of today would do well to think a great deal about Dr. Shepard," the speaker said. "His life covered nearly the entire span of the freedom of the Negro people. With his left hand and with almost all of his body he stood within the system of slavery itself. Yet he died at a peak of glorious realization. He had the confidence of the Negroes of North Carolina, and bravely over the nation, for they knew that he served them all his life with all his heart, and showed in serving them a remarkable vision."

"He had the capacity," Johnson said, "to work for the development of segregated institutions as if he expected them to last forever, but he did everything in his power to change them. He died having the confidence and support of the finest element of white people in North Carolina. He never doubted that this minority would some day become the majority and make this one of the great states in the United States."

BAPTIST STATE CONVENTION OF N. C. UNDERWAY

Special to the CAROLINIAN

Gastonia, N. C. - The eighty-first annual session of the General Baptist State Convention of North Carolina got underway here Tuesday evening with the theme address on "The Church Teaching and Practicing Christian Stewardship" by the Rev. O. L. Sherrill, executive secretary.

In sounding the key-note, the Rev. Mr. Sherrill called for increased teaching on Christian Stewardship as a pre-requisite to its practice.

Meetings of the executive committee and Board of Missions were held earlier during the day at which time reports were heard from the executive secretary and the administrative committee.

A local program of welcome was also given at Tuesday night's session. The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. M. W. Morgan, pastor of the First African Baptist Church of Goldsboro.

President P. A. Bishop in giving his annual address to the body, Wednesday morning, urged ministers of the convention to vigorously fight for the constitutional rights of their people.

He also pointed out the need for more education through the churches and a spirit of unselfishness and requested increased support to Shaw University, foreign missions, state missions and the Oxford Orphanage. Also speaking during Wednesday morning session were: E. M. Butler, president of the State Ordinary School Convention; J. T. Hawkins, president of the B. T. U. Convention; Mrs. Ellen S. Alston, executive secretary of the State Women's Convention; the Rev. N. Roland, executive secretary of the N. C. Council of Churches; W. H. Quarles, president of the State Laymen's League; H. C. Gore, principal Jordan Sells' High School, Burlington, and T. A. Hamme, superintendent of the Oxford Orphanage.
