YOUR SCRIBE

By FREDRICK L. BURNS

A few days ago we had occasion to sit in on a session of the Superior Court. You know the age old story of our people making up 95 percent of these persons coming up for trial, so I shall omit that part.

As I sat there I could not help overhearing a conversation between two persons whose sons were to be tried.

"My child is such a good boy, I know he doesn't drink whiskey, much less make it," I've never smelled whiskey on his breath in my life," said the father.

However, to the surprise of the father the boys were convicted of making whiskey. They were permitted to pay fines and were released.

Let's get back to the thoughts we had in mind.

These mothers were due to pick their children that morning but because their boys were in trouble they drew their little savings and went to court to help their boys get out of trouble.

Nearly all persons coming up for trial that day were our people and that class of people that least can afford to pay court costs and fines.

One of these sons had not tried to help support the family, he would get his salary every week and throw his money away and come home and try to borrow money from his sisters, who would spend their money trying to help their parents keep the house together.

and attempt to fight them if they refused.

Yet this mother said, "I know my son doesn't do this or that."

Too often our parents come to the rescue of young boys who are not worthy of support.

We know several cases where parents have lost the family savings because of a good-for-nothing son, always getting himself in trouble.

I have heard these boys say, "I'll get into trouble if I get out for my old man, what let me go to the county road. How true were these words.

But these young boys need to learn a lesson. Had the parent been able to raise the money the first time they got into trouble, probably they would have realized how hard it is to get out of trouble and so easy to get into it.

And will parents ever realize that they never knew what their child does after he is out of your sight. You can only teach him the right things to do and hope and pray that he will heed your teachings.

Liberia still retains a protective color bar to some extent. Only people of African blood can acquire land in Liberia except by special dispensation or act of the legislature. Others may lease but not own outright.

Nurses of Saint Agnes Hospital and students of Saint Augustine's College, alumni and former students and the many friends of the Hunters will share in the pilgrimage. A wreath will be placed on the graves.
